Information is current as of September 8, 2000. For information on specific mortgage programs, call the lender. Rates, points, and programs are subject to change daily and cannot be guaranteed. Points include discount fees and origination fees. Quotes = rate+total points/APR (annual percentage rate), calculated as follows: conventional 20% down and $100,000 mortgage; jumbo 20% down and $252,700 mortgage; FHA 3%–5% down and $100,000 mortgage. Most quotes are for 30-day lock-ins, but can vary. Maximum conventional loan amount is $252,700; jumbo loans are in excess of $252,700. ARM–adjustable rate mortgage. ARM rates are quoted as follows: rate +total points/APR (type of ARM program is listed in parentheses). LTV–loan to value. MI–mortgage insurance. NA–not available. NQ–rates not quoted. Lenders, to be listed in this paid advertised column, call 480-905-8000 or 1-800-CNS-8525. Mortgage rates and programs are updated online daily. Art show at Springfield Museum of Fine Arts said, "the fact that we're realists. To understand and enjoy one of Dave's paintings, a person can stand really close and feel like they can reach out and touch whatever the subject of that painting is. With my work, someone could probably just sit in the couch across the room and take it in. I paint a lot of portraits of characters and try to bring out their personalities."

"I think our paintings really compliment each other," noted Doug. "All of the works being displayed at the show certainly aren't boring. There will be an awful lot to look at."

And the Brega's work is being collected all over the country and globe.

"We are internationally collected," David said. He noted one particular collector in Detroit owns 11 Brega brothers paintings.

It was those collectors that the Brega brothers contacted to put together their upcoming show.

Doug Brega's "Nubble Light" is included in the show.

"Doug and I basically had to go through all the work we've done, and we chose the stuff that we liked best," David said. "After that, it was a matter of contacting the people who owned the ones we liked." The Bregas ended up choosing about 75 pieces for their show—pieces which convey the last 25 years of their lives.

Among the pieces is David's "Colors" — featuring a leather and denim jacket which belongs to Aerosmith drummer Joey Kramer. In the painting, the jacket is positioned in front of an American Flag.

"It's the biggest undertaking I've ever done," David said, noting he's put in a total of about two years on the painting. He's had the jacket since 1994, but his work on the painting has been on and off. In fact, David is still working on it, but he said he will have it done before the show's opening.

"It's your basic leather biker jacket," David said. "It's just worn to the textures that one would find in any Brega oil painting." Jokingly, he added "It will be my showpiece if I ever get it done."

David said the upcoming retrospective show is a homecoming of sorts.

"My brother and I were born in East Longmeadow," he said, "about a block and a half from where the (Springfield) museum is."

David said as he and Doug grew up, it was their brother Steve who started drawing little sketches on pads of paper given to him by their grandfather.

After that, David and Doug began started cranking out their own series of sketches.

"As we got older, we gravitated towards art classes," David said. "But we were also very athletic growing up, which is sort of unusual for artists."

The Brega brothers both attended the Paier School in New Haven, Conn., where they learned much of their technique from Ken Davies, a Trompe L'Oeil painter.

After they attended art school, both brothers figured out what mediums appealed to them. It was in 1971 that Doug suggested to his brother "You take oil, I'll take water."

And the rest is history.

Three decades later, the Brega brothers are readying for what will be a tribute show. When asked if they're planning another show of this magnitude, David quips, "maybe in another 25 years."

For information on the show or directions to the Springfield Museum of Fine Arts call (413) 263-6800.

Laughs are back

had to be scaled back from weekly to monthly venues due to overall attendance and budgeting, there was still enough positive feeling to renew the live standup series for the fall, Tagliaferri noted.

"People are more motivated and more in the mood for going out for live comedy now at this time of year, toward the end of the summer. They're back from the Cape or other vacation spots, and the weather is still good. So we thought that the series might get off to an even better start and work better all around this time. Since we announced the return of the series, we're already getting people calling back from those who came out to the shows last year, so we're expecting a lot of return customers along with some new faces," Tagliaferri said.

The fall comedy series schedule will feature shows initially for one Saturday per month, possibly expanding to two if attendance is particularly strong, Tagliaferri said.

This Saturday's headliner, Marci "Coyote" Rose, is a Cape Cod-based comedienne with a saucy persona who's become a fixture on the Boston area summer tent theatre circuit, along with the indoor city clubs in Boston and New York over the rest of the year. She's also appeared on HBO's all-female comedy showcase "Women of the Night" and has credits as a playwright as well. Comedy Company CEO Wayne describe Rose's style as "a very in-your-face type of comedy, where she often likes to mix it up and interact with the audience and get very off-the-cuff with her material."

Weymouth's Bob Niles, who works as a welder by day, is a long-time area laugh-meister whose standup sets offer a sharp, observant local flavor. Wayne is another circuit veteran whose blend of comic story-telling, acoustic-guitar-driven musical knowledge and audience interaction has made him, among other things, one of the most sought-after opening acts for national headliners on the Boston concert scene.

The Boston Comedy Company and its official clubs were a driving force on the city's standup club scene back in the early '80s, when the national comedy stars jay Leno, Steve Wright and Steve Sweene were rising. But the organization has lain dormant in the area since the closing of Boston's Play It Again Sam's club in mid-decade, with only one operating club in, Greenwich Village, New York.

Last January's BCC opening at the No Wey Cafe was the first of a possible planned series of attempts to restore the official Boston Comedy Company clubs to the area for which they're named. One South Shore-based follow up took place last March when the company launched a live-comedy series at Laredo's on Route 53 in Pembroke.

Tagliaferri said that the Comedy Club backroom at the No Wey Cafe offers an intimate atmosphere, separate from the bar area, with a night-club setting and tables for four. This Saturday's opening night show, he added, will also include a fixed-price, all-you-can-eat buffet in the Cafe's front room.

"The comedy series in Weymouth is, most importantly, a chance for local people to see Boston and New York comics close to home," said Wayne. The Comedy Company owner added that local fans can look for names such as Chance Langdon, Tony V., Frank Santorelli, Bob "Boston's Wildman" Seibel and others at future No Wey Cafe shows.

Brudnoy AT THE MOVIES

David Brudnoy
CNC Film Critic

By David Brudnoy
CNC FILM CRITIC

Can you stand it? The Olympics — the presidential debates — the election — and the 16th annual Boston Film Festival, all in the same season? It's too much for a mere mortal to bear, truly. Well, like death and taxes, the film festival is inevitable, and, as always, it is a double-edged sword: too much to see all in a rush, for the reviewers, great gobs of choices to enjoy for the civilian moviegoer. The festival, running from Sept. 8-17, continues its familiar pattern of dozens of feature films — more than half of which will soon open for regular runs, some of which will never be seen by human mind again — and a great many shorts, most of which will have even less likelihood of reaching a wide audience.

The Boston Film Festival is not cutting edge, but it's also not fancy-schmancy, and also not fussy — no names, please — and it's not hidden away in the overpriced recesses of the golden West, costing a pretty penny to reach and a steel-trap stomach to endure. It's right here in the Hub, accessible to all within the reading audience, and at reasonable price. The films are screened primarily at the Loew's Copley Place theaters and at the Cheri.

Stars? You want stars? Ellen Burstyn and Jeff Bridges, both of whom have a distinguished body of work to commend them, and both with movies in the festival, will be the honored guests this year. The festival is always exhausting and invariably, once it's over, remembered with affection, and some of the offerings are first-rate.

Herewith, some of those offerings, reviewed by Ed Symkus (E.S.) and me (D.B.):

AMARGOSA A stunningly photographed documentary about Marta Becket, a successful New York ballet dancer who at age 43, left town and opened up an opera house for her own performances in the middle of the California desert. The closest town is 28 miles away, but people come to see her work, even now at age 75 . . . [illegible] paints, plays piano, owns [illegible] — and has stories about ghosts and wild burros. A beautiful, fascinating offbeat film. (E.S.) A-

THE BROKEN HEARTS CLUB Six young homosexual pals endure a summer in West Hollywood wondering whether they're beautiful enough to survive in their competitive milieu. Dean Cain (the erstwhile Superman on "Lois and Clark") is among the performers making what they can of the hackneyed material. They are cute, admittedly. (D.B.) C

CHARMING BILLY A grim little item about a pent-up, misunderstood fellow who reaches the ends of a number of ropes, climbs a water tower outside of town, and starts shooting whoever happens to drive by. Some scenes are clichéd, some are well acted, some are tension-filled. There are some inventive zig-zag flashbacks. Violent, but not very bloody. (E.S.) C+

ENEMIES OF LAUGHTER David Paymer, in a nice performance, is a guy who can't get a break with women or in his playwriting career, settling for churning out sit-coms instead. He has lots of blind dates, usually at meals, the funniest of which is a lunch date from hell with a hilarious Marilu Henner. The film runs out of steam in the last act, but there's some good shtick from Peter Falk and Bea Arthur as Paymer's parents. (E.S.) B-

ENVY From Australia, a disturbing story of a trio of vicious punks who run around attacking people for money or kicks or just humiliation. The mother of one young victim dreams of revenge, then goes about getting it. There's a back story to why the boy was targeted, all revolving around a little black dress. Some big plot holes, but mostly unnerving stuff about emotions gone awry. (E.S.) B-

GOYA IN BORDEAUX An impression, by Carlos Saura, of what the 19th century Spanish painter might have thought during his exile in France in his last year. With flashbacks to his glory days as the court painter, and tableaux about the wars that ravaged Spain and France during his lifetime, the film is impressively suggestive. (D.B.) B-

HENRY HILL A quirky comedy about a sweet but self-destructive musician who fails in New York, goes back home to Maine, then meets a rather free-spirited woman with some kind of a past. Revelatory flashbacks and strange chats with relatives paint unique family portraits. Lots of drinking, and a nice lead performance from Jamie Harrold. (E.S.) B-

HUMAN RESOURCES A young French business school graduate gets an internship at a factory in his hometown and finds that his bosses are duplicitous, the union leaders are ideological zealots and his father is stuck in the mud. The result: a major strike and some jolting revelations. You may leave singing "The Internationale . . ." (D.B.) B-

A MAN IS MOSTLY WATER Drugs and music and sex and relationships are in the background of this comedy about everyday life among shallow Los Angeles folks — one's a TV commercial actor, one's a frustrated documentary filmmaker, one smokes a lot of pot — and the women in their lives who have to put up with them. Some OK acting, but cliched writing, although there is a great cell phone scene. (E.S.) C

PITCH PEOPLE You know, the folks who sell things to us, at fairgrounds and on TV: medicine men, grafters, pitch people. This fun documentary shows how to "take your joint, buy all your garbage, get it all pratted and build your tip." Lots of archival footage, anecdotes from practitioners and colorful stories from historians. Ed McMahon is featured, as is the Popeil family, but not a mention of Salad Master's Chris Nahantis. (E.S.) B

REQUIEM FOR A DREAM A young ne'er-do-well (Jared Leto, in a break-out performance) tries to make a life for himself, his girl (Jennifer Connelly) and his pal (Marlon Wayans), through drug dealing. His mother (Ellen Burstyn) becomes habituated to diet pills and her fantasies. Impressionistically done, with fancy photography, and a gritty feeling that is all-consuming. (D.B.) B

SEVEN GIRLFRIENDS When an ex-girlfriend dies, Tim Daley (soon to be seen as "The Fugitive" on TV) goes on a search to figure out why none of his relationships worked, by visiting other ex-girlfriends. Funny, breezy, sometimes outrageous stuff with a serious edge. Similarities to, but very different from, "High Fidelity." Witty, imaginative script and a great cast. Stay for a mid-credits final shot. (E.S.) B+

SHADOW OF THE VAMPIRE A semi-fantasy about what F.W. Murnau went through to create the film "Nosferatu." With John Malkovich as the director and Willem Dafoe as Max Schreck, the actor who played the vampire, the movie is atmosphere-heavy and goes way out on a limb to say that the actor was in fact a real vampire. The movie sails out of control but the performances (also including Udo Kier and Cary Elwes) are oversized and compelling. (D.B.) B

A virtually unrecognizable Willem Dafoe stars in "Shadow of the Vampire."

TWO FAMILY HOUSE A nice guy in Staten Island in 1956, a loser at all he tries, attempts once more to succeed: He buys a house and hopes to turn the ground floor into a bar. But his upstairs tenant, a pregnant woman, provides a difficulty, resolvable only in the most unexpected way. The milieu is perfectly recreated and the acting, mainly by actors unknown to most of us, is believable. (D.B.) B

VENUS BEAUTY INSTITUTE Much honored in France — oodles of Cesars — this deals with four women who work in a Paris beauty salon, starring Nathalie Baye as the one who has given up on love but not on sex, and Bulle Ogier as her fastidious employer. The superficialities of the beauty industry get a working over, but the emphasis is on the craving for love. (D.B.) B+

WHAT'S COOKING Four large families — black, Jewish, Hispanic, Vietnamese — endure their traumata at Thanksgiving time, with stories entwining eventually. With Alfre Woodard, Dennis Haysbert, Mercedes Ruehl, Lanie Kazan and others. The tales aren't uniformly skillfully told and the stereotypes are predictable, but each has charms. (D.B.) B

THE YARDS A young guy just released from prison (Mark Wahlberg) is sucked by his best friend (Joaquin Phoenix) into criminal activities, way over his head. His aunt (Faye Dunaway), her new husband (James Caan) and his mother (Ellen Burstyn) all play crucial roles in this drama. The mood is dark and unforgiving, the performances lean and strong. (D.B.) B

Joaquin Phoenix (left) lures Mark Wahlberg back into a life of crime in "The Yards."

How do you complain to TWA?

Ask George

By George Hobica
COPLEY NEWS SERVICE

Q. I recently had a horrible experience with TWA. Two questions please:

First, what's the phone number and address to complain to TWA?

Second, can I seek any compensation for damaged luggage, loss of wages from the cancellation of my flight, and added personal expenses due to the cancellation?

A. The address for complaints is TWA Customer Relations, 1415 Olive St. St. Louis, MO 63103, or call (800) 892-2247.

Federal regulation provides for compensation for lost luggage, but not for damaged luggage. It's on a case-by-case basis. You can try to get some kind of compensation from TWA by writing to them (perhaps they'll give you vouchers good for future travel), but if that doesn't work, then the only alternative is to sue them, preferably in small claims court.

Q. I purchased two nonrefundable tickets on United Airlines. I'm worried about their labor dispute with their pilot and machinists, and that my flight might get delayed or even canceled. It's important that I get to my destination on time, to the point that I have already rebooked my flight on another airline.

What are my chances of getting a refund from United? I would appreciated your comments.

A. It might be impossible to get a full refund, but United is waiving the usual $75 change fee in many cases, so you might be able to use the ticket without extra charges for a future flight. You could always ask United for a full refund and see what happens.

It seems like the pilots dispute is being settled; we'll see about the machinists.

Q. In response to your recent praise of Southwest Airlines being more flexible with changing a ticket and issuing a refund than other airlines are, I think you should point out that if your flight is canceled or delayed on Southwest, they refuse to put you on another airline. Also, if your flight is canceled and you can't reach your final destination, all they offer is to fly you on another Southwest flight or to refund the fare for the unused portion of your ticket. But that doesn't help much if you're stranded halfway through your trip and you want to get back to your original destination.

George Hobica

This is true even if you're on a full-fare ticket. Other airlines, especially if you're on a full-fare ticket, will put you on another airline's flight.

A. This is a good point. Southwest isn't perfect, and like anything, there's a trade-off when you buy something that's really cheap. But, their prices are very good, and, believe me, if they weren't around, airfares in this country would be much higher than they already are.

Q. Travel books and columnists like to promote use of duty-free shopping when traveling in Europe. On a recent trip to the European Union, we purchased a few small items and returned via Copenhagen. Since no one had indicated that obtaining the return value-added taxes was any big deal, we did so.

But, oh, my, what a torment! It was very hard to find the tax office in the airport, and we had to drag our bags through the terminal, leaving the security clearance area and going back into the "outside" area, for an hour and a half trip. We then had to rush through baggage check to catch our plane. The total amount of tax returned to us was $3.

It appears to me that the EU has no intention of making it easy for tourists to get their money back. Is this a problem at other locations?

A. Actually, the EU would like to do away with tax-free shopping altogether, and may succeed in doing so, since it cuts into tax revenues. So, maybe that's why they make it so hard.

I have had good luck, however, getting the VAT refund in England. Most stores will issue a refund to your credit card, and the VAT office is usually easy to find in most United Kingdom airports.

It's usually not worth the hassle, however, for a "few small items" - if you're not buying something worth $200 or more, you might want to forget it, and most stores have a minimum purchase requirement anyway.

Bradley wins big; Cantwell captures primary

Landslide victory over Holden sets November slate

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

The scene at the Hingham Sons of Italy Hall was electric after the early election results were posted shortly after 9 p.m. Tuesday that showed Garrett Bradley with a comfortable lead over his challenger, Michael Holden.

When Bradley walked in with his wife, Heather, and daughter, Amanda, the room went wild. Bradley and Holden, who had come over to congratulate the victor, made a beeline for each other, hugged, and then spoke to the crowd about making sure the Third Plymouth District seat becomes Democratic for the first time in decades.

"I want to thank all of you who went out there in the morning and held signs, or made phone calls, and stood outside today and in the rain."
— Garrett Bradley

When all the votes were tallied, Bradley won 68 percent of the Democratic vote and walked away with the party's nomination for the state representative seat held by Republican Mary Jeanette Murray for the last 26 years.

Out of the 4,868 ballots cast for either Bradley or Holden, Bradley received 3,332 compared to Holden's 1,536. Bradley won by a 2-to-1 margin in Cohasset and Hull, and fell a handful of votes short from doing the same in Hingham, where both candidates reside.

"I want to thank everyone for a great year," Bradley told supporters. "I want to thank all of you who went out there in the morning and held signs, or made phone calls, and stood outside today and in the rain."

He also thanked his family, and "most importantly" his wife.

Bradley said the upcoming campaign against Republican nominee

Will face incumbent Hedlund in senate race

By Alice Coyle and Jeanne Rideout
ACOYLE@CNC.COM & JRIDEOUT@CNC.COM

Scituate voters couldn't turn the tide for native son Ted LeClair in Tuesday's primary.

While LeClair beat Democratic challenger Jim Cantwell by a margin of nearly 2 to1 in Scituate, and edged him out by 68 votes in Cohasset, those were the only communities in the eight-town district he took in the election. Cantwell won the Democratic nomination for state Senate 7,855 votes to 6,480. LeClair is now vowing to put his considerable support behind Cantwell in his fight to unseat state Sen. Robert Hedlund in November.

"Ted LeClair ran a fantastic campaign. There were positive discussions, with priorities being education, health care reform, and protecting quality of life."
— Jim Cantwell

While she had called for a 25 percent voter turnout, Scituate Town Clerk Barbara Mafflucci said only 18 percent of the town's 12,606 registered voters turned out for the election and cast 2,289 ballots. Of those, 1,686 voted in the Democratic primary for state Senate and only 555 of those votes were for Cantwell.

It was a different story in Marshfield where LeClair now lives, but where Cantwell was born and raised and served as selectman and as a conservation commissioner. Cantwell won by his largest margin in his hometown beating LeClair 1,430 to 697. Cantwell also won by large majorities in Weymouth and Duxbury.

All over the district voter turnouts were dismal. Hingham had the highest turnout with 24 percent of its voters heading to the polls. Hull was second with 21 percent and Cohasset was third with a 20 percent turnout, followed by Scituate's 18 percent. Hingham, Hull and Cohasset – which make up the Third Plymouth District – also had a race for the Democratic nomination

Governor says Greenbush a go

Mitigation promises made at State House powwow

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Governor Paul Celluci has made it clear to town officials throughout the South Shore that the Greenbush train is coming, but its impacts on the region will be mitigated.

After meeting behind closed doors for more than 90 minutes, representatives from the towns of Cohasset, Scituate, Hingham, Weymouth, and Braintree, as well as Transportation Secretary Kevin Sullivan, emerged from the Governor's office looking weary, but with both sides saying they were pleased with the discussion.

"They didn't commit on any specific mitigation measures, but we certainly got a pledge to work with us more closely at perhaps a higher level," said Cohasset Selectmen Chairman Thomas Callahan. "At least they heard what our problems are."

Sec. Sullivan said he and the head of the state's environmental protection agency were directed by the governor to work closely with the towns over the next 30-60 days and make some headway in mitigation negotiations with the towns. "The governor has instructed me to redouble our efforts for mitigation," he said. "One of the things that came up was the people who live along this corridor have a need for more mitigation, whether it be sound walls, whether it be tunnels, or other types of things to ease the impact. I've been told to personally get involved with this to see if we can't come up with some solutions."

But Sec. Sullivan said though the state will make sure proper mitigation is given to those affected by the train, restoration of the dormant track is inevitable.

"We're not going to make everyone happy, but the fact is this train is going to get built. But it will get built with the proper mitigation," he said.

The meeting was set up by Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, in an effort to educate the governor about the towns' concerns regarding restoration of diesel-engine train service to East Weymouth, Hingham, Cohasset and Scituate.

In Cohasset, residents are concerned with possible flood-plain impacts as a result of the track, safety at grade crossings, and sound and vibration mitigation. In May, the MBTA had agreed to six mitigation items, including a new well on Sohier Street, coordinated traffic lights at the Forest Avenue and King Street intersection, an emergency access bridge for Rocky Lane and a $100,000 historic preservation fund. But the town was informed by an MBTA representative in June the MBTA was taking its mitigation offers off the table.

"At least they heard what our problems are."
— Selectmen Chairman Thomas Callahan

Hedlund said he opened up the meeting to all towns affected by the train because they shared similar concerns. Yesterday,

Tourist trap is not part of village vision

Workshop highlights revitalization priorities

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

In an effort to alleviate the fears of townspeople, Cohasset businessmen Gerde Ordelheide and Peter Roy told a crowd of about 100 last week they share the same vision for the village as most residents — to see it spruced up — and don't want to turn it into a tourist attraction.

Their comments were made at a public forum put on by the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation (CRC), of which Ordelheide, owner of the Red Lion Inn and Lilac House, and Roy, owner of Kimball's by the Sea and Atlantica, are prime backers.

Steve Cecil, of the Boston-based design and engineering firm, the Cecil Group, led the public brainstorming session about the needs of the village area.

A brief slideshow displaying areas the group is looking at was followed by a public comment period identifying the good, the bad and the ugly of Cohasset Village, Elm Street and the harbor area.

"The village is the center of town life," said Cecil. "Everyone thinks of it a little differently, about what they like."

He asked those in attendance in the middle/high school auditorium to focus on "what is good and worth saving" in the village, rather than the revitalization of the village in general, or comment on the CRC itself, which some residents oppose.

Basic consensus was that improvement should focus on public safety issues such as better sidewalks and lighting, while maintaining Cohasset as a "walking community," as one resident put it.

"The beauty is that children can go down on their bikes, and we don't have to worry about buses or traffic," the resident said.

Though the majority of comments were positive and constructive, some residents did express their concern about what effect town renovations or the "prettying up" of the village would have on tourism.

"The village is the center of town life. Everyone thinks of it a little differently, about what they like."
— Steve Cecil, consultant

Residents were fearful the town would become another Hyannis, besieged by tourists, with the beneficial impact of the improvements being "wiped out."

"Shopping [in the village] is for residents, not tourists. That's what's important," said a resident. "We want it to be attractive for people to shop, not make it a tourist town."

Ordeleheide said he can't be interested in revitalization for business reasons, because the town doesn't have the infrastructure to support a large number of tourists. His recently renovated Red Lion

Selectmen's meeting

Because just three selectmen attended this week's Monday meeting (Ronnie McMorris, Merle Brown, with Michael Sullivan acting as chairman), the board declined to discuss in detail the articles Town Manager Mark Haddad placed on next month's Special Town Meeting warrant. Instead, the board will meet this Monday, Sept. 25, at 7:30 and discuss the articles.

A special town meeting will be held Oct. 23, at 7 p.m. at the Cohasset Middle/High School auditorium.

Fate of gravel pits is still in limbo

New committee to decide future

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Should it become a parking area?
A soccer field?
A baseball diamond?
Something else?

These questions, which surround the North Main Street gravel pits, will hopefully be discussed and answered by a newly formed town committee in the coming months.

The committee was formed in response to years of concerns and complaints regarding the use of the pits by area residents. For the past two years, contractors working on the town's sewer installation project have used the pits as a staging area to store excavated earth from the project. Before that, the pits were used as a storage area for the town's public works department, and originally was the source for the town's gravel.

However, with sewer work scheduled to wrap up sometime in the next month, the question has been, what next for the pits?

At a selectmen's meeting earlier this month, Town Manager Mark Haddad suggested the pits be leveled off with fill from the upcoming school renovation project, and set up a meeting with the pits' abutters to discuss the proposal. However, a series of events resulted in this past Tuesday's hearing being packed with angry and concerned residents.

Haddad had scheduled a meeting with the town's conservation commission last Thursday to discuss the idea, but due to personal reasons, he was unable to attend the meeting. At the meeting, residents were shown a plan to fill the gravel pits and create an athletic field and additional parking area. Just days before, a contractor working in the pits decided to be a good neighbor and help out by knocking down a number of trees bordering the existing Little League field, and the pits, and create a temporary parking lot. This resulted in area residents thinking work had already started without any discussion.

However, as Haddad explained at the hearing, the contractor knocked the trees down without permission from the town. He also said the plans residents saw were unofficial plans that had not been approved by the town, and were designed just to give the conservation commission an idea of what the town was looking to do.

Despite assurances from Haddad, and Selectmen Ronnie McMorris, Merle Brown and acting chairman Mike Sullivan, residents still expressed concerns about dangerous waste underneath the existing piles, destruction of wastelands, and even more noise to the area.

Red Gate Lane residents David and Kathleen Marks brought photos showing piles of asphalt, which in some forms is considered hazardous waste because it contains petroleum products, being buried in the pit.

Conservation commission agent Paul Shea said the site contains a wetlands area in the back corner of the pit, though some residents contest there are two wet areas on the property.

The proposed filling of the site stems from the need to remove 14,000 cubic yards of earth from the school renovation projects scheduled to begin next spring. Haddad said that amount could raise a 200-foot by 200-foot area by 10 feet. By keeping the excavated earth in town rather than transport it out of town, Cohasset would save approximately $200,000. Because the project is going out to bid in December, Haddad hopes to include this aspect of the project into the Request For Proposals. Additional parking is needed, said selectmen, to offset the parking crunch North Main Street experiences every Little League season.

However, because of all the uncertainties involved with the project, abutters requested more time to look into the issue. "We really haven't had time to think about it, much less make a decision," said Peter Laney of Red Gate Lane. "I've known about it for three or four days."

Sullivan proposed setting up a committee made up of abutters, a representative from the Cohasset Youth Baseball Association, a member of the Recreation Commission, and other town officials to come up with a neighborhood-friendly plan for the pits.

Selectmen also hope to place an article requesting $15,000 for an area engineering study on this fall's special town meeting warrant.

Haddad said he will look into using the newly cleared out area as a temporary parking lot for next spring.

Bradley ad rankles some

Selectmen regret Town Hall setting for photo

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

A political advertisement run by Democratic state representative candidate Garrett Bradley, that featured the Cohasset Board of Selectmen, has caused a stir among some people in town.

The half-page ad, which ran on page 3 in the Cohasset Mariner on Sept. 7 and 14, featured Selectmen Thomas Callahan, Ronnie McMorris, Fred Koed, Merle Brown and Michael Sullivan standing with Bradley in the Selectmen's Office in Town Hall, under the banner headline, "The entire Cohasset Board of Selectmen agree."

The selectmen have all announced their endorsement of Bradley, a Hingham resident, over Democratic opponent Mike Holden, also from Hingham.

Selectmen agreed to pose for the photograph the same night state Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray came to town hall to present the town with a state grant to help pay the debt for the water treatment plant built in 1978.

> "It should be done on private property period."
> — Ray Kasperowicz, sewer commissioner

"We never even thought about it being taken in Town Hall," said Brown, when recently asked about the location of the photo.

The week after the ad first ran, Ray Kasperowicz, a town sewer commissioner and member of the Republican Town Committee, relayed the committee's concern with the ad during a selectmen's meeting, and said the ad gives off the impression the selectmen are endorsing Bradley as an elected board. Though he recognizes an elected official's right to support a political candidate, he took especial objection to the photo being taken in a public structure.

"It should be done on private property period," Kasperowicz said later, and added that not "one watt of electricity" from a taxpayer-funded building should have been used to "illuminate a political photo."

He said the Republican Town Committee unanimously voted to protest the photo, but added that their objections went beyond simple partisan politics. "If [Republican state representative candidate] Mary Anne McKenna ran it, it would not be the right thing to do," said Kasperowicz. "It wouldn't even occur to me to do something like that.

"If the sewer commission had come out and endorsed [McKenna], you can bet [selectmen] would've said something about that."

He also was worried about how the appearance of the board endorsing a candidate as a board would sway undecided voters.

"It's a picture of a full board. To some people not fully engaged [in town politics] they might think there was a vote of endorsement to endorse Garrett," he said.

But that was not the intention at all, said both the board and Bradley.

"I have during the course of my campaign for state representative, spoken individually with each member of the Board of Selectmen, and asked for and received each selectmen's individual endorsement," said Bradley. "The Board of Selectmen as a body has never endorsed any candidate, including myself. I apologize to the board and to the citizens of Cohasset if my campaign literature publicizing these endorsements was not clear enough on this issue."

The letter also said that if any concern directed at selectmen should instead be directed at himself.

Brown said he has received "three or four" phone calls criticizing the board's decision. He confirmed that he had officially endorsed Bradley, and said the photo "happened quickly."

He added "it's important to point out that we all endorsed him as individuals" and that a vote was never taken.

In fact, Sullivan said the five selectmen had never discussed endorsing anyone until they were standing next to each other for the photo. However, though he regretted the location of the photo, he said the controversy has "turned into more of a partisan issue."

McMorris said she understands how some citizens may be concerned, but also said she endorsed Bradley as an individual, not as part of a board.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said he has received just two phone calls asking about the advertising.

AROUND TOWN

GREETINGS!

Hello Everyone. What a great week we have had here in town. The Farmers Market has been in full swing, an extra one was held on Saturday. Soccer has started and I have seen so many people, both young and old out walking and enjoying our beautiful September. The schools are all off to a great start and I can't wait to hear all the news in the upcoming weeks, that the schools have to offer.

GIFT WRAP TIME

Here is some great news from the school... It is Gift Wrap time here in Cohasset, the children are selling many gift wrapping items to help in the fundraising efforts of our schools. Please take a little time to look at and order some of the great things that are available and help out the schools! The funds raised help with things like teacher grants and enrichment programs and the schools keep 50 percent of the total income.

PANCAKE BREAKFAST

Another beneficial fundraiser happening here in town is Pancake Breakfast being held on Oct. 1. When you are entering Milliken Field this weekend or leaving the grocery stores, please take the time to purchase a ticket to this event from the Soccer Players. Not only does the $5 per person cover your admission to the feast of various pancakes, sausage, juice, bagels and fruit, you will be helping to raise funds for two scholarships that are awarded each year to two deserving, Cohasset residents. Thank you in advance for your support!

Andrew Collins of Cohasset and Paul Mandeville of Marshfield, were two of three co-captains of the UNH lacrosse team. Andrew graduated with a degree in civil engineering and is off to Australia to see his sister-in-law compete in the Olympics.

THANK YOU CLAMBAKE

Monday night the Cohasset Rotary Club held its annual thank you clambake for those who assisted with the Road Race by The Sea in April, and filled up the beautifully landscaped Lightkeepers Hall with race helpers. The next Race will be the 25th annual one. The Rotary Club is looking for theme suggestions and special sponsors.

NEW ARRIVAL

Welcome to the World! We have a new baby in our midst! Jean and Randy Patterson of Ledgewood Farm Drive are delighted to announce the birth of their daughter, Kaitlyn Rose Patterson. Kaitlyn was born on August 15, 2000 at 11 p.m. and came into the world weighing 8 pounds, 3 ounces and was 20-1/2 inches long! Proud grandparents are Adam and Linda Crescenzi of Concord, Mass. and Donald and Betsey Patterson of Wellfleet, Mass.. Congratulations to you all!

ANNIVERSARY WISHES

I would like to send out a special one year anniversary wish to John and Alice Bellefontaine on Sept. 25. Best wishes to a great couple from Dad, Herbie and Polly as well as all of your friends here in town. May you have many, many happy years together.

CIVIL ENGINEER

Andrew Collins of 404 S. Main St. recently completed a degree program in civil engineering at the University of New Hampshire at Durham. Andrew, who played lacrosse for Cohasset High School, was co-captain of the UNH lacrosse team along with Paul Mandeville of Marshfield and Chris MacDonald of Weymouth. The 99/00 UNH lacrosse team, for the first time, won the New England Pioneer League division final at the University of Rhode Island in May and went on to St. Louis, Mo. to complete for the national title in club lacrosse.

Andrew is off to Sidney, Australia, along with this brother, Matthew, to watch his sister-in-law, Christine Smith Collins compete in the Olympics. Christine, a five-time gold medallist in world rowing competition, is on the US Rowing Olympic team and will compete in the women' lightweight doubles event.

Andrew's proud family, Mom and Dad – Gail and Fran – and brother, Dan, live in Cohasset. Dan is a web content coordinator of a local company. Andrew's sister, Laurel lives in Washington, D.C. and is an assistant to a congresswoman. Andrew's brother, Matthew, practices medicine in Worcester. Andrew is the grandson of Eleanor Collins, who resides in Cohasset, and is the nephew of Peter and Rose Collins, also of Cohasset.

That is all the news we have for this week. Please keep the news coming. You can reach me at jenpiep@yahoo.com, 622 CJC Highway or by phone at (781)383-1740. Thank you so much and I look forward to all the news for next week. Jennifer Piepenbrink

Soccer booster breakfast planned

On Sunday, Oct. 1, at the Deer Hill School, the annual soccer booster breakfast will be held. From eight to 12 volunteers will be flipping your favorite pancakes, be it chocolate chip or blueberry. This year the menu will also be expanded to include grilled sausages and bagels, among other things.

The varsity soccer players will be at the breakfast (girls 8-10, boys 10-12) to share ball skills and pick up play with whoever wishes.

Tickets will be available through the soccer players and at local events around town or at the door Sunday, Oct. 1.

Tickets are $5 each or $20 maximum family donation.

If you have questions call Kathie at 383-1237.

Walkathon to benefit wildlife center

A walkathon and children's fair to benefit of New England are planned for Sunday, Sept. 24, at the Wildlife Hospital in Hingham. The event is being sponsored by the New England Wildlife Center and Shaw Saab, Hingham Animal Clinic, Dedham Veterinary Associates, Hingham Painting and Decorating, Blue Plate Communications, Royal Sonesta Hotel of Boston, Dr. Debra Tranberg of Scituate Harbor Chiropractics, Black Pond Veterinary Service, Andrew Zona Studios, Stonehouse Antiques and Dr. Martin Iser of Hingham/Weymouth Family Medical to bring public awareness to the plight of wildlife and habitats that suffer at the hand of man's activities.

The center runs a wildlife teaching hospital and educational training program for undergraduate and graduate students. It treats 3,000 to 5,000 sick, injured and orphaned wild animals each year, trains 50 undergraduate and graduate students and teaches more than 5,000 elementary students each year.

The walkathon (which begins at 1 p.m.) is a two-mile loop through Bare Cove Park. Walkers are still needed for this worthy event. Call 781-749-5387 today for a pledge sheet.

The children's fair will include food, snakes, owls, children's games, a teddy bear hospital for your child's sick or injured teddy bears (free checkups available, no actual repairs done), a hayride, ponies and educational information about wildlife.

For directions, call the center at 781-749-5387.

Appalachia trip forms due Oct. 1

The Cohasset Appalachia Service Project held an informational meeting for its 14th work-camp experience on Sept. 17 at the Second Congregational Church. There was a slide show from last year's journey by the 138 volunteers to four counties in Kentucky.

Registration forms and schedules were distributed and explained. Do note this is a year-long commitment of fund-raising and preparation. The dates for the 2001 trip are tentatively set for June 23 to July 1. Deadline for returning the forms and non-refundable $100 deposit is Oct. 1. The trip is open to anyone in 10th grade or older and any interested adults.

Visit the group's new web site, www.cohassetASP.org hosted by Dreamcom.

Garden Club meets

The Community Garden Club of Cohasset will hold its first monthly meeting of the season at 9 a.m., Tuesday, Sept. 26, at the Second Congregational Church, Bates Hall. The topic will be "A Year in The Life of The Bee. " This program, given by Howard Scott who runs the Bee School in Kingston, will be a learning experience about the world of bees and their contribution to flowers.

Scott is a U Mass graduate and earned his MBA from Wharton. For 20 years he has kept bees behind his Pembroke home. He is the author of "Bee Lessons," in which he shares what he has learned through his careful observations. Scott also writes for "The American Bee Journal."

Car wash on Sunday

The Junior Class of the Cohasset High School is holding a car wash this Sunday Sept. 24, from 8 a.m.-3 p.m. at the Olympic Texaco Gas station on Main Street. For a small donation you will not only receive a clean car, but will also be helping the students of your community raise money for the numerous school sponsored activities. The junior class hopes to see you Sunday.

Angelspeake author

An Angelspeake Workshop and book signing by Trudy Griswold, author of the best selling books, "Angelspeake: How to Talk With Your Angels" and "The Angelspeake Book of Prayer and Healing," will take place at the Second Congregational Church of Cohasset Wednesday, Oct. 18, from 7 to 9:30 p.m.

The class fee is $40. To register and reserve your seat, call 383-0345.

Gala reunion planned by class of 1950

The class of 1950, Hingham High School will hold its 50th reunion on Sept. 29, 30 and Oct. 1. (The class had a vehicle in the Fourth of July parade in Hingham.)

The reunion committee has planned three days of events that will start Sept. 29 with a tour of their old high school, the present town hall. They were the first class to graduate on the front lawn. Classmates may park at the Hingham Bathing Beach, Route 3A and a shuttle will take them to the tour which will start at 1 p.m. and conclude at 3 p.m.

Classmates will then move to the Sea Crest Resort in Falmouth where two days of activities have been planned. Many classmates have confirmed reservations and will be coming from all over the United States.

Additional questions will be answered by calling Danny Valentino (749-2562) in Hingham, John Connell (383-1499) in Cohasset, or Bob Drew (545-4114) in Scituate.

Bridge club starts

The Owl's Nest Bridge Clubs is sponsoring the ACBL (American Contract Bridge League) sanctioned game every Monday at the community center.

Bridge and its competitive partner, duplicate bridge, are the world's most popular games and indeed the very same game, only the scoring system is different. Every Monday the game will begin at 12:30 sharp. Refreshments will be served just before the game begins and the doors will open in time for coffee. Partners are available for those who don't have a partner. The scoring will be stratified thereby giving every player a chance to earn his/her master's points at every level of play.

Club director Bill Wennerberg is certified by the ACBL and currently runs very successful games in Wareham and Duxbury. Bill is also an ACBL certified bridge teacher and he will offer lessons for all interested players and non-players on the morning of game day.

For more information about any of the games or lessons please call the bridge club at 508-746-8715.

Stepping over the line

Having covered the Cohasset selectmen for as long as we have, there is one thing we can say for certain: the five of them rarely see eye to eye on anything.

That's one reason why it's so surprising that all our selectmen — Tom Callahan, Fred Koed, Merle Brown, Michael Sullivan and Ronnie McMorris — agreed to use their office to endorse a candidate in Tuesday's Democratic primary. They posed with Garrett Bradley in a photograph taken in selectmen's quarters at Town Hall, which belongs to all residents regardless of political affiliation, and allowed the photo and their names and titles to be used in a political advertisement.

What isn't surprising is the half-page advertisement that ran on page 3 of the Cohasset Mariner (9/7, 9/14) caused a stir in town from all sides of the political aisle. We've received several letters and calls from residents, who described the selectmen's decision as "unethical," "poor judgment," "inappropriate," and "just plain dumb."

We say ditto to all the above.

It would have been a completely different story if Bradley chose to have five separate pictures with each selectman. That shows individual support, but the photo of all five has the appearance that the town and its main governing body collectively voted to endorse the Hingham Democrat.

Here at the Mariner, we try to make sure that all political advertising is in good taste and, if names and/or photos are used, that the candidate has the permission of those individuals, as was the case with Bradley's ad. One of the main reasons politicians take out paid advertisements is they can say what they like, within reason, whether that's in an endorsement or a stance on an issue. The job of the advertising department was fulfilled in making sure all those pictured agreed to use their names and faces for the ads. That was as far as it had to go.

Editorially, it is a different story — as reporters and editors we strive to ensure articles we write are fair and unbiased.

We also understand that local office holders — whether they are selectmen, school committee members, water commissioners, etc. — have opinions. They are likely to be members of political parties, and may be involved in town Republican or Democratic committees. So it's perfectly appropriate if they choose to be actively involved in campaigning, fund-raising or decide to adorn their cars with stickers and yards with signs for a particular candidate or slate of candidates.

But where our selectmen crossed the line is using their office and Town Hall to make a political endorsement. And for the record, the selectmen say they regret posing for the photograph in their office. But sadly, it's too late.

As former selectman Diane Sullivan says in her letter this week, the office of selectmen has traditionally been non-partisan and selectmen are elected to serve all the citizens. It is irrelevant that selectmen didn't officially vote to back Bradley — they didn't have to. Their action is tantamount to an official endorsement.

Mr. Bradley told us any flack over the advertisement should be directed at him, not the selectmen. We don't agree. We don't blame Garrett Bradley, who was involved in a hot primary battle for the Democratic nomination against Michel Holden for state representative, for using whatever campaign tactics he could to gain votes.

No one should point the finger at Republicans for stirring up a hornet's nest in town after the advertisements appeared. If anything, selectmen's endorsing a candidate in this manner interfered with the Democratic primary process.

So for Cohasset, what's next? Will the sewer commission, planning board, and other elected boards — follow suit by endorsing candidates from their town offices?

The selectmen's action has changed Town Hall politics and where it will lead is anybody's guess. But one thing is for sure: this will be an election issue in the spring when two of the selectmen's seats go up for grabs. And for the first time in our memory, political party affiliation will be included in candidates' profiles we publish — along with a question about whether, if elected or reelected, they would use their office to play partisan politics.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Abuse of office

TO THE EDITOR:

How outrageous to see a half page ad in the Sept. 7 (and Sept. 14) Mariner with a photo of the Cohasset Board of Selectmen endorsing a candidate in the Democratic primary! Our selectmen are supposed to operate in a non-partisan manner, and should not use their office for purposes other than town business.

The selectmen owe Cohasset citizens an apology for their representing that our town government supports a particular candidate.

Let's be up front

TO THE EDITOR:

It falls far short of being up front when Cohasset Selectwoman Ronnie McMorris is continually endorsing Garrett Bradley, an employee of her husband, David McMorris, without disclosure of this fact. Voters ought to understand the package deal they are getting if they vote Mr. Bradley in.

I found the advertisement in the last Cohasset Mariner showing all of the Cohasset Selectmen in favor of Bradley, as well as a recent mailer with her endorsement, a bit disturbing without such disclosure, as well.

Those who have been in disfavor of McMorris, or who do not want to see her elevated through some back door, ought to know about the "Bradley" package, which is potentially open to pressures or professional disfavor if he doesn't include her in some role. My apologies to Garrett, but it's not a clean deal he's pushing here.

Political endorsements

TO THE EDITOR:

I read with extreme interest all that occurs within my beloved town of Cohasset.

I too shared Judy Fitzsimmons' shock that the board of selectmen were all photographed in an endorsement ad for a candidate for state representative.

When you run for office in Cohasset, you run asking for all vofers to support your candidacy, regardless of their party affiliation because your want to represent all citizens of Cohasset and it should remain non-partisan when you are elected.

Selectmen obviously hold personal beliefs but their individual beliefs should not jeopardize Cohasset's future goodwill with its elected state representative no matter who the prevailing candidate may be. Town politics ideally is supposed to be free of partisanship.

I assure you that if I were still representing Cohasset my face would be noticeably absent from the endorsement ad because it was inappropriate, broke with longstanding good leadership and was unprofessional, in my opinion, regardless of the candidate.

Frankly, the selectmen must have alienated a substantial segment of the very residents who may have supported their candidacy and they will not forget.

I missed the opportunity to be "out there" with my 4-1 vote on the limb I often found myself on. I would have vigorously spoken against such an ill-advised action.

I miss Cohasset and all my close associations there. I thoroughly enjoyed the honor of having been elected to serve all of Cohasset as best I could.

With my best regards to all.

Poor judgement

TO THE EDITOR:

Rail service: Although the town voted in favor of rail service; the two selectmen chosen to meet with Gov. Cellucci are opposed. The likelihood that Cohasset's majority opinion will be expressed is nil. Further, the feedback to Cohasset residents is likely to reflect the "spin" of opponents.

Selectmen for Bradley photo op: Pretty dumb. Using the selectmen's office as the setting was inappropriate. If Holden were to win, the citizens of Cohasset could be disadvantaged.

Vendor for trash collection: Very simple. All residents must adhere to the same standards regardless of the conveyance method, privately owned vehicle or contractor vehicle.

No tourist destination

COHASSET BOARD OF SELECTMEN:

Subject: Cohasset Revitalization Corporation

Though somewhat wary of this (CRC) organization's desire to change Cohasset into what I think would be a different, less desirable and less pleasant place in which to live, I've done nothing until writing this letter to you.

CRC's overture toward inclusiveness is designed to give comfort. But they will prevail unless there are many loud cries of objection. They seem to be restless for action and major alteration of our town through heavy expansion (for now, in the village), and many real estate transactions — both those completed and those being worked at, along the harbor as well as in the village, with the thrust toward heavy tourism.

Another alarm bell rang when I read the pamphlet sent to me "Norfolk County Works." I read about a grant of $18,800 from the county — our tax money, of course — to the South Shore Chamber of Commerce to increase economic development in the region, specifically in the areas of tourism and telecommunications infrastructure. On its face, it doesn't seem like a big deal, but I never knew our county handed out money to business interests in this way. Hopefully you all have received and read this pamphlet. In time you will receive a survey about their plans. Please note my concerns.

Am I correct in remembering that the director of CRC was (or is?) chairman of the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce? Was he once an employee or committee chairman of the South Shore Chamber of Commerce?

Do the residents of Cohasset want to get into tourism in a big way? No one has asked that question yet. I would not like to have Cohasset turned into a tourist destination. I'm confident I'm not alone. There is serious money pushing from the other side. I'm frightened. This is my cry of objection.

COHASSET CARES

By Allan MacDonald
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Proceedings of the first Recycling Committee monthly meeting of the new season, Saturday, Sept. 9, at 10 a.m. in the DPW Building:

Welcome back after the summer. We have a lot on our plate with PAYT to be instituted this coming July (2001). Chairman and Vice Chair have attended meetings on PAYT. We are hoping to re-locate some of our bins for greater efficiency. The price of corrugated rises and falls, from $105/ton to $35/ton.

Saturday, Sept. 30, is both Hazardous Waste Day and Paint Day, and we'll need all the help we can get. Traffic control will be a factor. A DEP rep will be here to guide the operation.

We need to get the schools involved in recycling—through state/federal recycling education grants, poster contests, whatever. Fall school committee presentation needed.

Paint recycling during the summer was very busy, and we appreciated your volunteer help.

We now have a guard watching for RTF stickers. Quite a few have been turned away with many excuses for not having a sticker.

With the 40-yard roll-off we bought for demolition hauling, our savings will pay for the bin in a very short time. We are trying to discourage people from dumping the wrong things in the wrong places. .

As of April 1 it is required by state law to recycle TV's and computer monitors. After Dec. 31 the charge will be $5 for TV's 19" and under and monitors and $10 for larger TV's.

Compost bins are selling well. Time for more publicity with fall clean-up here. RTF compost needs turning more in order for it to get cooked and before the sifting. When the leaves start coming in, we won't have room to turn the compost over.

As far as paper recycling is concerned, we still need to educate townspeople about emptying the brown shopping bags and recycling those in the corrugated. Recycled school paper, the commonly-used 8-1/2 x11, even if colored and with staples, is worth a lot, $110/ton, and is currently being wasted in all the schools. Something should be done about this.

We lost out on the Municipal Recycling Incentive Program because curbside pick-up haulers are not recycling. Joe Laugelle is the only one who is recycling. We'll see how the meeting with the haulers and the board of selectmen about the haulers' recycling comes out.

Schools must recycle their fluorescent lights, and we have a new collection area for these behind the paint shed.

Research on locating cloth shopping bags is discouraging; they want around $25 per bag. Stop & Shop will donate 5 cents to conservation for every paper or plastic bag a customer brings in.

The new boutique is an Eagle Scout project. Right now more funds are needed before the fellow can proceed. Any ideas for funds?

We'd like to create some kind of sculpture from our junk for the entrance, such as a dinosaur. An opportunity to be imaginative and constructive.

We're lucky to hold Dicky Poland ("working foreman" is his exact job description), who's in the process of retiring. We lost Paul, our second-in command. These are tough jobs, and it's hard to keep the workers. Maybe we should run an article called "Who are these people?" describing how they have to work weekends and are otherwise not appreciated by the public.

We're really missing Fred Blossom. Also the few volunteers willing to handle returnables noticed, like Dicky, that when people don't shut off their motors, the exhaust fumes are terrible.

Keep thinking. Do what you can. See you Saturday, Sept. 30, to help.

And see you next time.

Allan MacDonald is publicity chairman for the Cohasset Recycling Committee.

LIBRARY CORNER

Building committee

There have been two major developments this summer regarding Cohasset's new library. First, Patience G. Towle, chairman of the trustees of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library, has announced the formation of the Cohasset Library Building Fund Committee. Its members include Bet Baker, Woody Chittick, Ralph Dormitzer, Mark Dunne, Sheila Evans, Bernadette Faulkner, Jane Goedecke, June Hubbard, Bill Kelley, Beverly Koswick, Polly Logan, Roger Lowe, Laurie MacLure, Agnes McCann, Monica McKenney, Doris McNulty, Wisner Murray, Diarmuid O'Connell, Kathy Ofsthun, Sarah Pease, Barbara Power, Sallyann Kakas Quebec, Jack Reardon, Suzan Redgate, Carol Riley, Peggy Schroeder, Kathleen Sherbrooke, Linda Wakeman, and Roger Whitley.

The committee's mandate is to help raise funds in support of moving the town library from its 1903 building on South Main Street to the renovated former Osgood School on Ripley Road. At the annual Town Meeting, it was voted to appropriate $2.9 million for this purpose, provided that the library trustees raise $700,000, that Cohasset receives a Library Construction Grant from the state for $1.45 million, and that the selectmen sell the current library building when it is vacated.

Subsequently, the trustees have decided to try to raise as much money as possible, in light of possible increases in construction costs and the desirability of establishing a fund to maintain the new library.

Suzanne Terry, children's librarian, poses with Erik Belz and Greg Smith of Cohasset, who won the best picture award for "David's Road." Erik, editor and cinematographer, and Greg, actor, were two of many young adults who participated in the first South Shore Libraries Young Adult Video Contest 2000.

A Donor Wall at the new library will list all donors of $1,000 and more to the building fund. Pledges may be paid over three years and are fully tax deductible. Certain parts of the library may be named with a plaque honoring the donor or his or her designee, according to a schedule of gifts of $5,000 or more.

The building fund drive is going extremely well with 100 percent of the elected library trustees having pledged $84,000 to the project. The committee is currently targeting larger gifts and the entire town will be included in a mail solicitation at a later date.

Second, the Massachusetts Board of Library Commissioners announced Aug. 3 an application round for Library Construction and Planning Grants. Following the schedule announced, Cohasset will submit a letter of intent by Oct. 4, and the Construction Grant application by Jan. 18, 2001. On June 7, 2001, the library commissioners will vote funding or waiting list status to those applications recommended by independent review panels. The Legislature included $12 million for Library Construction projects in the Supplemental Budget recently passed.

Internet tutoring

Individual internet tutoring taught by local volunteer, Jim Benedict, will continue Monday mornings from 9 - 11 a.m. through September and October.

Pre-registration is required. People interested may sign up for the hourly session by contacting the library at 383-1348.

CANDIDATES CORNER

Bradley response

This is in response to the letter from Judy Fitzsimmons appearing in last week's Mariner. Ms. Fitzsimmons is correct that an explanation is owed to the citizens of Cohasset, but she is incorrect that the board of selectmen owes such an explanation.

I have, during the course of my campaign for state representative, spoken individually with each member of the board of selectmen and asked for and received each selectman's individual endorsement. The board of selectmen as a body has never endorsed any candidate, including myself. I apologize to the board and to the citizens of Cohasset if my campaign literature publicizing these endorsements was not clear enough on this issue.

I am proud to have received each selectman's endorsement and will continue to focus on important issues facing our community. If any reader has questions about these endorsements or my campaign for state representative, they can feel free to call me at (781) 740-7272.

McKenna ready to race

Mary Anne McKenna, candidate for state representative for Hingham, Hull and Cohasset, has been preparing since January for the general election.

"I have a dedicated committee that has been working diligently for many months, and they are well-prepared to lead us to victory in November," she said. When people feel passionately about a candidate and the causes she espouses, they put all their time and energy into the campaign. I am honored to have such dedicated people working alongside me."

McKenna has been preparing for the general election by attending numerous civic meetings, neighborhood coffees, fund-raisers, and school events in an effort to meet the people of the district and discuss their concerns.

"I have knocked on thousands of doors since last winter and will continue to do so until every voter in this district has had an opportunity to be heard. I am looking forward to representing my constituents in the Statehouse on a full-time basis. The race is on for this seat and believe me, I am ready," she said.

Debate definition

TO THE EDITOR:

Will no one rid those pesky knaves that abuse our language, calling the subject meeting a debate (Cantwell, LeClair debate, page 1, Sept. 7), founded some time ago by Oxford College wherein each contestant must address both sides of the issue.

In France, a government commission guards their language from this type of abuse. Since the media has the greatest influence on our language, please pick up the gauntlet by fuss, fuss, fussing over the precision of our words.

Lawyers argue the case for their clients benefit without regard to the other side of the issue. Requiring lawyers to debate the case would better inform the judge and jury, at the expense of TV potential.

Gun control

TO THE EDITOR:

In response to the letter to the editor titled Gun Violence in the Aug. 31 Mariner, it is the intention of Stop Handgun Violence – South Shore to increase local awareness of the violence that is incurred by guns that are not subjected to safety or regulatory measures. Thanks to our governor, Paul Cellucci, our attorney general, Thomas Reilly, committed citizen's groups and our 1998 gun control laws, we in Massachusetts can rest easier knowing the guns in our state are under the strictest laws in the nation. Simply translated this means Massachusetts gun makers are mandated to make safer guns, criminals cannot depend on lax laws to obtain illegal guns, children do not have easy access to guns, and all Saturday Night Specials and assault weapons are banned. These laws do not put us under totalitarian threat, but instead they save lives.

Everyday 14 children under the age of 19 are killed and many more wounded by guns. Nearly all childhood unintentional deaths occur in or around the home. Approximately 1.2 million elementary-aged, latchkey children have access to guns in their homes. Gunshot wounds are the single most cause of death for women in the home. Gunshot wounds are the second leading cause of death for all people ages 10-34. These are just some of the facts. Laws such as the Brady Bill do in fact, prevent crime. Because of the Brady Bill, 536,000 ineligible people have been stopped from buying guns at gun stores. The ban on assault weapons has lowered the amount of deaths on our streets. Parents everywhere do have the right to send their children to anyone's home to play and not be faced with the possibility of their finding an unlocked, accessible gun. A gun in a home is 43 times more likely to kill a family member or a friend than to kill an intruder. We are not asking to make guns illegal, just that they be responsibly owned.

And so to answer Mr. Smith's question on how we are going to "come up with solutions that will in fact reduce violence and not increase it," lets us explain. We are hoping to debunk the myth that gun laws are unconstitutional, by educating ourselves about the risks of guns, and by supporting the candidates that uphold these laws.

These are issues that we all need to come together to discuss and understand each other's point of view in light of the facts, and maybe we can have less rhetoric and more listening and learning. Stop Handgun Violence would like to invite Mr. Smith, along with all the candidates, clergy, town and school officials, students and resident of Cohasset to a forum on gun control. This will take place at Walton Rodgers Hall at St. Stephen's Episcopal Church, Oct. 5 at 7:30 p.m.

Ancient Olympics off to tricky start

Once upon a time there was a Greek king called Oenomaus of Elis who had a drop dead, gorgeous daughter named Hippodamia.

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Hippodamia wanted to get married but there was a catch.

King Oenomaus decreed that she could marry only the man who could spirit her out of the royal castle in a chariot and escape the pursuit of her father, the king.

Thirteen confident young Greeks tried it. Thirteen disappointed young Greeks failed. And thirteen young Greeks became thirteen dead young Greeks, run through by a spear wielded by the king, who couldn't stand a loser.

The fourteenth young Greek was Pelops, who turned out to be not only a confident young Greek but a tricky one as well.

King Oenomaus decreed that she could marry only the man who could spirit her out of the royal castle in a chariot and escape the pursuit of her father, the king.

He bribed the king's charioteer to tinker with the underpinnings of the royal chariot so that when Oenomaus was just about to catch the fleeing pair, a wheel came off and the king broke his neck.

The new King Pelops of Elis was so pleased with the result that he declared a festival of fun and games and that's how the Olympics were born.

Or so the story goes.

Others say the Olympics began around 1450 BC when the best athletes, orators and musicians from the Greek city states were gathered at Mount Olympus to see who was the best of the best.

Mount Olympus was chosen because it was the abode of the gods; it was remote enough to be considered a neutral ground — and the base of the mountain was a field large enough to handle the largest crowd. The size of a facility was important even in those days.

The first Olympic champion of record was a runner named Coroebus of Elis who won a foot race in the 776 BC games and was awarded a wreath of wild olive leaves from a tree planted by Hercules in the sacred grove at the Temple of Zeus.

Later, jumping, discus-throwing, boxing and wrestling were added to foot-racing on the menu — and still later there was "honorable political activity," for which the winner was awarded a gold-plated olive wreath worth $100.

There's a message in there somewhere but I'll be damned if I can figure it out.

Women were banned from the ancient games, even as spectators, under penalty of death.

That ended when a doting mother named Pherenice disguised herself as a man to work the corner for her son, Peisidorus, in the boxing finals.

Peisidorus won and the ensuing display of mother-love disclosed Pherenice's identity.

But a kindly judge — no, it wasn't Maria Lopez — took pity on her and overruled the death penalty with the proviso that hereafter all trainers would have to go about their duties in the nude.

After a while, women had Olympic games of their own called "Heraea" after the wife of Zeus. There was only one event, a 525-foot foot race which the girls ran barefoot wearing a tunic with the right shoulder and breast bared. An early day sex test, no doubt.

Olympic contestants themselves wore only loin cloths until 720 BC when a runner named Orsippus lost his loin cloth en route to the finish line and upset the favorites in the race.

After that no one wore clothes and attendance in the field at the foot of Mount Olympus soared.

Schlafly on education

Eagle Forum, a national conservative pro-family organization of volunteers, was founded in 1972 in St. Louis by Phyllis Schlafly. Eagle Forum trains its members to participate in the public policy making function, especially education, foreign policy, and constitutional issues. Massachusetts Eagle Forum will host attorney, author, lecturer and nationally prominent pro-family leader Phyllis Schlafly on Sunday, Sept. 24, at Lantana, Randolph at 1 p.m.

Schlafly will address: Why the public schools are being federalized; how the ESEA, Elementary and Secondary Education Act cements into place the goals of a nationalized curriculum; nationalized testing and teacher certification. She will cover how this federal grab for power affects parents, taxpayers, educators and how this will spell the end of local and state control of America's public school classrooms.

Government Island group to get new charter

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Saying it was important to have someone watch over Government Island, selectmen voted to reestablish the Government Island Study Committee as an "advisory committee" charged with being the caretaker of what Selectman Fred Koed called a "showcase of the town."

The GISC met with selectmen earlier this month after the committee complained it was being ignored by the board because its input was not sought on matters concerning Government Island. Committee chairman Ham Tewksbury asked what the point was in having the committee if that trend continued. Selectmen responded by asking the study committee to come to a meeting and update the board on what the group has been doing. At that time, Selectman Merle Brown even threw out the possibility of disbanding the GISC.

At last week's selectmen's meeting, however, it was a different story. GISC members Tewksbury, Robert Davenport, Noel Ripley, Constance Afshar and Dick Barrow, turned out in force to explain the group's purpose.

Government Island was originally owned by the federal government, which operated the Minot's Ledge Lighthouse. When the light was automated in 1948, and lightkeepers were no longer needed, the land was declared "surplus" and sold to Cohasset. It was placed on the National Register of Historic Places in 1998.

The property includes the former Lightkeeper's Residence, the templates used to construct the second Minot's Light, the Lightkeeper's Memorial, Beacon Rock, the sailing club and the harbormaster's shed.

> "I think it's wonderful they are willing to donate their time."
> — Selectman Michael Sullivan

According to Tewksbury, the GISC, which has been in existence for 54 years, has overseen the cleaning and maintenance of the templates, clearing and enlarging the Ed Young Parking Lot behind the Lightkeeper's Residence, helped move the lightkeeper's boathouse to the adjacent Hagerty Property and helped organize the renovation of the Lightkeeper's Residence.

He said though the original job of the GISC was to "evaluate the island for possible use" after it was turned over to the town by the federal government, the committee is still viable.

"We point out things that need to be done, or corrections to be made," said Tewksbury. "We oversee the property."

Selectman Michael Sullivan likened the group to a "maintenance watchdog group" for the island.

"I think that's a very good way to put it," Tewksbury responded.

Both Sullivan and Koed spoke up to say the group was still important to the town.

"I think it's wonderful they are willing to donate their time," said Sullivan. "It gives us someone to go communicate with [about the property]."

"I think they have a much needed institutional memory," Koed added.

Brown came around and suggested perhaps the committee had outlived its intended charter and suggested a new one be drawn up, changing the name from the Government Island Study Committee to the Government Island Advisory Committee (GIAC).

Because the committee's charter is wrapped up in town bylaw, an article will be on the Oct. 23 Special Town Meeting warrant, asking the town to approve the name change, and give the committee an updated mission.

The GIAC will consist of seven members, who will:

keep the selectmen and town manager advised of the condition of Government Island for the recreational use of Cohasset residents make suggestions to selectmen and the town manager regarding the maintenance and improvement of Government Island propose any capital expenditure necessary for the maintenance and improvement of Government Island report annually to selectmen, as well as provide the board with copies of minutes of meetings.

Afterwards, Tewksbury said he was pleased with the meeting. "I feel good about the way it went," he said. "There's been a lack of communication, but that's possibly on both parties.

"Our activities will perhaps be the same, but I can understand the idea of changing the name from study to advisory. It sort of makes sense."

Street paving slated for certain streets

Residents of the below listed streets are hereby notified that road resurfacing associated with recent sewer line installations is planned for Wednesday and Thursday Sept. 27 and 28 between the hours of 7:30 am and approximately 5 p.m. All residents' vehicles should be off the streets to expedite the work. The sewer commission requests you plan ahead, where possible, to avoid the inconvenience of being unable to drive from your home for the several hours that the paving equipment is in the vicinity of your driveway. Residents on streets that have only one access/exit route may experience greater inconvenience and therefore planning ahead is particularly important. Parking your vehicle off your property at a public parking area or a friend's property not on the paving list would be a good solution if you have an inflexible schedule on these dates. The sewer commission regrets any inconvenience this work may cause and appreciate your cooperation.

Overlay paving being conducted in conjunction with the on-going sewer project will occur on Sept. 27 and 28 commencing at 7:30 a.m. on the following streets:

Pond Street, Buttonwood Lane, Woodland Drive, Holly Lane, Briarwood Lane, Clay Spring Road, Reservoir Road, Old Pasture Road, Evergreen Lane, Arrowwood Street, Tupelo Road, Bayberry Lane, Pleasant Lane.

Reduce stress of college process

Bella English, a columnist for The Boston Globe, will be featured in a panel discussion entitled "College Application Mania" at the Cohasset High School auditorium Thursday, Oct. 5, from 10:30 to 11:30 a.m. The presentation, which will also include college admissions officers and stress management experts, will be moderated by the Cohasset High School guidance office. This program is sponsored by the Social Service League of Cohasset. For more information, call (781) 383-0771, Ext. 2 or e-mail: sslcohassset@aol.com.

Following a legend

New Cohasset A.D. has big shoes to fill

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Ron Ford loves everything about his new job, with one huge exception.

Being an athletic director has been the 32-year-old's "dream job" for virtually all of his adult life. He loves sports, loves working with kids, loves the challenge and even has a masochistic predisposition that allows him to love the hectic work pace. The one thing he doesn't love about his job, and in point of fact hates it with every fiber of his being, is the way he got it: the death of Cohasset's beloved Clark Chatterton.

"Not even an hour goes by when I don't think of Clark," Ford said of Cohasset High's longtime athletic director who succumbed in his battle to cancer in July at the age of 58. "Without a doubt, that's the most difficult part of this job: knowing that I'm here because he isn't."

Of course, it helps Ford to some small degree to know that he is a better athletic director because of Chatterton.

"He loved the job and the kids, and that really came across," assessed Ford, who was in the perfect position to judge, serving the past three years as Chatterton's assistant AD. "He created such a great atmosphere, and that's what I want to maintain. He showed me everything an AD should be."

Ford points to the "incredible support" the athletic department receives from town officials and citizens as a legacy to this positive environment fostered by Chatterton.

Cohasset's Athletic Director Ron Ford in the office he used to share with Clark Chatterton

"The help I've received getting ready for this school year has just been phenomenal," said Ford, who was formally named two weeks ago by the school committee to serve as acting AD. "The DPW, Dr. Golden, the town manager, school committee, soccer boosters, gridiron club...there's just too many people to name. This town is just great when it comes to supporting youth athletics and Clark had a lot to do with developing that."

One of Chatterton's causes that Ford would like to carry on is the battle to see that every kid who wants to play interscholastic sports is permitted to do so. Cohasset had a "no cut" policy in place when they first kicked off formal team play for the middle school in 1996. However, budget constraints eliminated that provision after just two years.

With nearly 50 percent of the 300 students at Cohasset High involved in at least one of the school's athletic programs, cuts almost had to be made this fall for the first time in years. Cuts have been necessary at the middle school the last two years, with similar proportional turnouts from their student body of approximately 200.

"Not even an hour goes by when I don't think of Clark. Without a doubt, that's the most difficult part of this job: knowing that I'm here because he isn't."
Ron Ford

What Ford would like to see at the middle school level is the creation of a second team if enrollment numbers exceed the one team limits. He claims to already have support in this campaign from the school committee. The acting AD says that stepping up fundraising efforts would definitely be an avenue he'd take in order to re-institute the "no cut" policy, as would "creative budgeting" of athletic department funds. However, such a move may well also require additional funding from the town.

"I hope the people in town realize that if we cut a kid, he or she might never come back," said Ford. "For some of the kids, that might be it for them in sports. We want our kids playing sports for as long as they can and for so many reasons."

Ford is extremely proud of the athletic program established under Chatterton, and with his help these past three years. Cohasset High School is the smallest school in the South Shore League, yet the athletic program has been one of the league's most prosperous, in terms of both consistent success and numbers.

Clearly, the middle school program overseen by Ford as part of his assistant AD duties the last three years has been a great feeder system for the high school teams. In fact, Cohasset Middle School was formally recognized last year as The Model Program by the Massachusetts Secondary School Administration Association.

Although Ford served as acting AD from February to September 1998, while Clark underwent cancer treatment, the school committee opted to name Ford "acting AD" through the end of this school year. At that time, the school committee is expected to make him the permanent AD or post the position.

Given that the high school has a new principal in place this fall in Dr. Michael Jones, Ford insists that he completely understands the school committee's decision.

"I think the committee wants to give us a chance to work together, and see how that goes before they commit to anything," said Ford. "There was also a timetable issue here with Clark just having died this Summer. Those things considered, I think the decision is completely

Field hockey team remains perfect

But the real test for 4-0 Lady Skippers comes this week

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

The field hockey team extended its best start in years with a pair of decisive wins this week— a 2-1win over East Bridgewater on Friday and a 2-0 blanking of Mashpee on Monday—to improve their record to 4-0.

On Friday, the girls mucked it up with East Bridgewater following a morning of heavy showers.

The messy conditions made for a slow field, but the Lady Skippers took advantage, keeping play in their offensive end for 90 percent of the game.

"We put the pressure on right from the start and it kept looking like we were going to score, but then we just couldn't push it across," reported head coach Debbie Bostwick.

Fortunately, the Cohasset coach didn't have to wait all that long for her team to push one across. Just before the 12 minute mark of the first half, sophomore Deanna Brown knocked in the rebound of an Andi Shaugnessy shot. Brown was called up from the junior varsity squad for this game because Debbie Bostwick felt her team needed more speed.

Cohasset continued to dominate the territorial battle throughout the first half, as illustrated by their 11-1 advantage on corner shots.

Just before halftime, however, a Viking player was able to get behind the Skippers' defense and knock a rebound past senior goalie Krysten Considine.

"I think that goal was a case of our defenders being lulled to sleep a little bit by our dominance at the offensive end," offered Bostwick. "They didn't have much to do up to that point in the first half, and I think they were caught a little off balance as a result."

So, despite the Skippers' superiority, they found themselves tied at the break, and Bostwick made a point of making sure her girls remained focussed.

"I tell the girls at the beginning of every second half that they should pretend the game is a tie," confided the coach, "Up until now, we've been ahead in every game at the break, so I had to make sure they reacted like we were really in a battle this time."

Bostwick's charges did not disappoint, picking up where they left in their territorial stranglehold over East Bridgewater. Again, however, a number of missed early opportunities began to haunt the coach.

"Sure, I was getting nervous," said Bostwick, admitting the she had visions of a repeat of the Vikings first half score that came out of no where.

The game winner was finally delivered at the 25:10 mark, howev-

Skippers winning 'one week at a time'

Football team makes it 2-0 with come-from-behind win at Nantucket

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

A week and a day after steam rolling Archbishop Williams 24-13 in the season opener, the Cohasset football Skippers faced a formidable challenge in heading into the Nantucket football field for game number two.

"It was like we were in a foreign country," offered head coach Tony Rolfe, referring to the surprisingly hostile crowd on the island.

Amazingly, Cohasset seemed not to be affected by the five hour journey to the game, not to mention the 6 a.m. departure by bus from Cohasset High. Every one of Cohasset's players went into action as if they were on the familiar Alumni field, as they rolled to a 12-8 victory.

"If you can beat Nantucket in Nantucket, you've played a pretty good game. The people down there don't like to lose at home."
Cohasset head football coach Tony Rolfe

"If you can beat Nantucket in Nantucket, you've played a pretty good game," remarked Rolfe. "The people down there don't like to lose at home."

Cohasset's defense was the main story in this game, not allowing Nantucket's offense into the end zone once. The home team's only score came on a first half punt return.

"The way our defense was playing, that was the only way they were going to get in," praised Rolfe.

The most noticeable of the many defensive standouts were linebackers Ronan Buick, a senior, and first time starter, sophomore Ben Lynner. Junior nose tackle John Hussey, playing in place of injured junior Pat Carbone, had a solid game plugging up the middle of the field and shutting down Nantucket's ground attack. Another first game starter, junior Paul Previte, also exceeded coach Rolfe's expectations.

Not to be outdone, the offense played as tough a game as any, wearing down Nantucket's er, when senior Kelly Lordan fed a beautiful crossing pass to Heather Peranio, who then unleashed a quick slapper from 10-feet that the Vikings goalie was virtually powerless to stop.

"That was just a great shot," attested Bostwick.

Still fearing a repeat of the first half fluke goal, Bostwick went into field hockey's version of the prevent defense, playing three fullbacks with two sweepers. The altered strategy proved effective, as the visitors never mounted much of a threat through the remainder of the contest.

Bostwick also had some trepidations going into Saturday's away game in Mashpee in particular about the effects of a 90-minute bus ride. So needless to say, she was delighted when her girls came out with fire to gain a scive a quick territorial advantage. The coach estimated that the ball was on Mashpee's side of midfield for 75 percent of the first half. As had been the case three days prior, however, the Lady Skippers again had trouble finishing near the net.

It took two Skippers to finally break through late in the half, as Shaugnessy and Lordan struck ball in a scuffle near the net at precisely the same time and into the back of the net.

Cohasset field hockey standout Ashley Ulmer makes a push upfield.

Cohasset cushioned their lead 3-0 into the second half when Kelly Devine deflected a free hit from Sarah Kidder for the first goal of her career.

Bostwick feels that the long bus ride finally started to take its toll over the game's final 15 minutes or so, as, for the first time all game, the host Mashpee players managed to sustain a lengthy attack. Fortunately, Cohasset goalie Kristen Considine came up huge repeatedly down the stretch. The coach reported that her senior goalie made three "brilliant saves" alone in the last five minutes to preserve the shutout.

"After just having to watch the action at the other end of the field for most of the game, I was amazed at how focussed Kristen was at the end of the game," lauded Bostwick.

The Lady Skippers face their biggest challenge of the year to date with a home game against perennially powerful Carver on Wednesday. And things won't get much easier the next day when the girls take on Hingham, still soaring after last week's 300th career victory for their coach, Meredith Gordon.

"We should have a pretty good idea of just how good a team we really are by the end of this week," noted Bostwick.

Soccer team yearns to be offensive

Lady Skippers need to find scoring touch

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

The preseason was a tough one. The beginning of the season was even tougher.

Determined to get back on the winning track after two seasons in which they collected only six wins total, the girls varsity soccer team ran double session practices all through the end of the summer. After showing steady improvement through each of the first three games of the season, there is hope that this goal will be achieved.

The season began on a difficult note, as the girls lost to the Hanover, a perennial powerhouse, 7-0.

"It was discouraging," said third year head coach Deb Beal. "Especially since we worked so hard in pre-season."

Then, a few days later, Cohasset showed vast improvements against league powerhouse Norton, but ended up blanked 4-0.

"We started to play a little bit better," said Beal. "But we still needed to regroup."

Cohasset's quickly rising talent was put to the test against another tough, state champion contender in Norwell on Friday. Though the Lady Skippers came out on the losing end, 3-0, Beal felt the showing was definitely a morale booster.

"That was the first time we played like a cohesive team," stated Beal. "The girls were really feeding off each other."

Beal received productive play from a variety of players, covering all four grades.

Senior captain Maureen Equi, voted a captain for her exemplary hustle and work ethic, was a major force in keeping the ball in Cohasset's possession.

"She will just run and run and run, said Beal. 'She just doesn't stop."

Senior sisters Kathleen and Kerry McCarthy, splitting the outside midfield positions were also instrumental in forcing attacks on the Norwell defense.

"The twins have really come into their own this year," praised Beal.

Junior captain Maggie O'Neill, a varsity player since her freshman year, was moved from her usual position of stopper to midfield in order to encourage her offensive strikes.

"She's a great player, one of the best on the team," Beal stated matter-of-factly.

The sophomore class, with a multitude of talented players, displayed sweeper Yasmine Afshar and forward Molly Flanagan as a solid nucleus for years to come.

And freshman Gillian Weber continued to astound Beal with her quickness and adaptation to varsity play.

"She's one step ahead of everybody," said Beal. "She has a good sense of the game."

Freshman goalie Marissa Mello, seeing her first varsity action in place of injured sophomore Kelly Holway, recorded eleven saves.

Holway dislocated her shoulder 12 minutes into the game against Hanover, and was deemed out for the season. But a second opinion told her she would be fine for the fourth game.

Kerry McCarthy stepped in to mind the net against Norton.

At 0-3, Beal still has the confidence that her squad can perform a complete 180 and start winning some ballgames.

"We can definitely turn it around," she said. "We are starting to understand what we need to do."

Beal was able to name the three necessary skills lacking from this team in order to be successful.

Number one: possession.

"I asked them, 'do we want to be a losing team?'" explained Beal. "We need to control the ball."

Number two: aggression.

"50-50 balls in the air, we are just watching them come down," said the coach. "We need to work on that."

And finally: finishing.

"This group is a team that can win," remarked Beal, "I keep telling them, the floodgates have got to open soon."

'One week at a time' defense with sustained drives.

Junior quarterback Jason Brown played exceptionally well, especially in the second half, confusing the defense with a well balanced offense, combining a mix of running and passing plays.

On the receiving end of both of Brown's touchdown passes, with another called back at the end of the game due to a holding penalty, was junior Nick Bolster. His two scores pushed his season point total on the season to 24, good for third place among all Division 4 teams in the state.

Senior captain running back Brian Krupczak surged in the second half for the second straight game, collecting 87 yards on only 20 carries for the game. With 227 yards through two games, good for an average of 4.8 yards per carry, Krupczak is currently rated second among Division 4 runners.

Though Cohasset's offense had a very good game, Rolfe expects nothing but the best of his players, and has a bit of fine tuning to do in practice.

"We still need to polish our offense," said Rolfe. "We are still making mistakes."

At 2-0 for the first time in over a decade, Cohasset's season looks bright. Coach Rolfe, though, refuses to take anything for granted.

"We are just going to take it one week at a time," stated Rolfe.

Unlike Rolfe, most Cohasset fans seem to be elated after two very promising performances by the Boys in Blue. But the third year head coach has kept a cool head, not allowing his players to get too far ahead of themselves.

With Cape Cod Tech coming to town, Cohasset would love to push it to 3-0, very much on the right track for a winning season.

"We'll find out," said Rolfe, as he reviewed the tape of Saturday's game. "We're not thinking of anything besides Cape Cod Tech right now."

In order to continue down this road toward success, Rolfe feels that there are still a few things that needed purifying.

"Everybody is going to have to improve, not just one person," he said.

So when the Olympics end in less than two weeks, Cohasset should still have some high powered sports action to which to look forward.

New coach molds team

By Lou Molinari
CORRESPONDENT

Cohasset High's new boys soccer coach Dave Nigro has a formula that appears to be working.

The first part of the formula concerns possession ball. The Skippers just about have that down. The next part is attack.

As of Tuesday, possession ball has earned Cohasset a 1-2 record, playing against the iron of the South Shore League, Hanover and Norwell.

"I was a little concerned the players wouldn't adapt to my style of play," said the first year coach. "I like to teach the kids possession ball. That's the way I coached in the Massachusetts Premier League.

"The kids have to control the ball until they can get into the right position to kick the ball in."

"My style of play is different than that of most high school coaches, so I wasn't sure how the players would take to it. They've adapted to my style of play, and it's beginning to take hold.

"I'm satisfied with what I have seen from the team with possession ball play. Now we'll start practicing attacking. Once the two come together, I think we're going to have something really good."

Cohasset beat Norton in the opener, then lost to Hanover High, the defending Eastern Mass. champions.

Next up was a powerful Norwell team. Norwell defeated Cohasset, 2-1, but for a while it looked as though the Skippers had themselves a well-earned tie.

With four minutes remaining in the game and Norwell leading, 2-1, Cohasset sophomore Greg O'Connell got off the kick from the upper corner that blew into the net. However, according to the coach, it was ruled a foul had been committed in the box, canceling the goal.

The lone goal against (undefeated Norwell (4-0) was scored by junior Matt Bilodeau.

"We had plenty of chances in the game, we just didn't finish off the plays," appraised Nigro. "We've got to move to the next step. Once we get there, we'll start winning."

Practice play means plenty to the coach. As a result of his play in practice, freshman Chris Clark got into his first varsity game, the Norwell game.

"I noticed him in practice," said the coach. "He was outplaying just about everyone on the field. I felt he deserved a shot with the varsity, and he played a strong half for us. By having him play just a half with the varsity, he was still eligible to play a half with the junior varsity.

"Chris is a midfielder and he looks like he's going to be a really good one."

The coach is also happy with his goalie Nick Pastone, a senior.

"Nick has been playing excellent goal for us. I was happy to see him come out this year, since he did not play last year. He's made some key stops for us and just keeps getting better."

Coach Nigro also singled out captains Eric Shea and Doug O'Brien for their play: "The two seniors have been playing very well and helping out the younger players quite a bit."

After coaching 10 or 11years in the Premier League (under 16) how does coach Nigro feel about coaching high school soccer at this early point in the season?

"I like coaching high school kids. They are very responsive and seem to adapt a lot easier. So far, it's been a nice change."

Cohasset was scheduled to meet Carver on Wednesday, a SSL team, and then come right back on Thursday, playing Hull at Cohasset in a 5 p.m. game.

Hull is at the bottom of the league standings and Carver is one or two slots above them.

It looks like an opportune time for Cohasset to exit the week with a winning record.

The extra mile

With Joe Reardon

The fall road-racing season is heating up with one of the more popular races on the South Shore circuit slated for Sunday, Oct. 1. The T.K. O'Malley's 10K Road Race and walk through Scituate is expected to draw upwards of 600 competitors of all ages to participate in the 10K, 10K walk and kids 1K fun run.

Race director Paul Tansey, now in his second year at the helm, said the races should generate between $10,000 to $15,000 in for Scituate schools as in past years in what has become an event for the entire family.

The finish for the 1K kids' run will pass under the official clock, giving the youngsters more of a race experience. The kids, Tansey said, are the ones who truly make the day a strong family outing.

The races begin at the Gates Intermediate School with the 10K walk kicking off at 9a.m. the kids 1K fun run slated for 11 a.m. and the feature 10K race beginning at 1 p.m. The course's strength is that it gives runners a true feel of the scenic beauty of Scituate, with the challenging climb up Beaver Dam Road in the sixth mile thrown in for good measure.

First prize is a one-night stay at the luxurious Bostonian Hotel and awards will be presented to the top-three finishers for both men and women in the following divisions: 18-and under, 19-29, 30-39, 40-49, 50-59 and 60-and-over. T-shirts will be given out to the first 300 registered runners. Pre-registration fee is $12 until Sept. 19 and $15 after. The 10K walk and fun run are $7 or $12 with a T-shirt.

- Local runners captured several age-group awards, Sept. 10, at the William Degan 10K and 5K Road Race. Cohasset's Mike Kearney was fourth in the 30-39 division with a time of 37:48.

Ford has been a physical education teacher at the Cohasset Middle/Senior High School since 1991, and has coached in 25 of the 27 sports seasons since joining the school's faculty. In the fall, he served as the girls' junior high soccer coach from '91-'95 and then as the junior high football coach the last two years. Basketball has dominated his winters. He coached the JV boys' squad before moving on to the varsity in 1992. In the spring, he coached JV softball for his first two years, varsity baseball from '94-'97 and middle school baseball from '98 through last spring.

"I'm guess I'm just an all around sports guy," laughed Ford, a graduate of Xaverian Brothers High School and Bridgewater State College. "I like being around the kids and I guess I know enough about enough sports to be of some help."

Basketball is by far his favorite, though. Chatterton made him the state's youngest varsity basketball coach in 1992, and Ford rewarded that confidence with some great seasons, including a pair of sectional championships.

Ford is not coaching anything this fall, as he adjusts to the considerable demands of his AD position. However, he has no intention of abandoning his basketball team this winter.

"I'm going to keep coaching basketball as long as I can," he said. "Fortunately, coaching in the winter months is probably the easiest because those are the easiest months for the AD, not having to worry about fields and all."

SPORTS NOTES

Cohasset Little League tryouts for Major Leagues

The Cohasset Youth Baseball Association (CYBA) has announced that it will be holding tryouts for the 2001 Major League season on Sunday, October1 at 1 p.m. at Barnes Field on North Main Street.

Youngsters who will be 10, 11 or 12 years old on or before July 31, 2001, and are not currently playing at the Major League level, are invited and encouraged to participate in this once a year tryout.

All those who are eligible should plan to attend, as this is the only opportunity to tryout.

Applications are available at Town Hall or can be completed upon arrival at Barnes Field.

Participants are requested to arrive at 12:30 p.m. to facilitate the registration process. There is NO MONEY REQUIRED for this exercise, but each participant should bring a baseball glove, bat and long pants.

Any questions regarding tryouts may be forwarded to Mark DeGiacomo (6413), Dan Leahy (1005) or Bob Morgan (3265).

Annual soccer fundraiser Oct. 1

The breakfast hosted by the Cohasset Soccer Boosters will be held at the Deer Hill cafeteria on Sunday, Oct 1, between the hours of 8 a.m. and noon. This year, unlike others sponsored by the boosters, pancakes will be made to order, whether it be blueberry, chocolate chip, strawberry or just plain old buttermilk. Also sausages and bagels have been added to the menu which differs from years past.

For the $5 per person, $20 maximum family admission price you are also entered in the raffle which will take place at the breakfast. This year professional sporting events tickets, gift certificates and sporting goods articles to name a few of the articles will be given away. I

For more information or to donate to the raffle call Kathie at 383-1237.

A FACTORY SALE!
1 DAY ONLY!
Saturday, September 23
College Mirrors, Clocks & More

As you may know, we DO NOT sell our mirrors to the general public, but through fine specialty stores and catalogs. However, every six months or so, we have a public sale of discontinued items and slightly damaged merchandise. The faults are usually minimal – a dent here, a chip there. But even as is, these mirrors, boxes, clocks and frames are exceptional values.

We cannot tell you here which scenes and designs we have, and we cannot produce special orders for you during the sale. Suffice it to say, we have a large and varied selection. And during the day of the sale, artists will be demonstrating our unique technique of reverse glass painting.

So take a Fall ride to the charming New England village of Shirley and stop and see us for a great buy. We'll be happy to tell you where to shop for antiques, where to have a delicious lunch or where to go for a scenic, leisurely stroll.

Eglomisé Designs, Inc. 17 Leominster Road, Shirley, MA
Visa & Mastercard accepted. Open 9am to 4pm
Directions: On Route 2, take Exit 36. Follow Shirley signs 2 miles to STOP sign. We are left of the STOP sign in the big red mill. Signs will lead you to our entrance.

West Nile Virus turns up in Cohasset birds

Two West-Nile infected birds have turned up in Cohasset and additional birds have been sent in for testing, Cohasset Board of Health agent Dr. Joseph Godzik said. He said the two birds that tested positive so far, were turned into the state by residents who called the state hotline at 1-877-603-3572. One of the birds was found on Linden Avenue and the other on Pleasant Street.

The West Nile Virus (WNV) is transmitted from infected birds to mosquitoes, then to humans. There is no evidence that a person can get WNV from handling live or dead infected birds.

Mosquitoes become infected when they feed on infected birds and can then transmit WNV to humans and animals while biting. The virus cannot be transmitted from person-to-person. So far there have been no reported cases of West Nile Virus in humans in Massachusetts, Godzik said.

Cohasset joins 15 other towns in the state that had WNV-infected birds reported for the first time during the week of Sept. 5-12. Hull, Weymouth and Braintree are also part of that group. WNV-infected crows were previously reported in Hingham and two more were found there this week.

Though the nights are starting to get cooler and mosquito season is winding down, mosquitoes are still around and precautions need to be taken such as:

avoiding outdoor activities between dusk and dawn if possible, since that is the time during which mosquitoes are most active;

wearing a long-sleeved shirt and long pants when it's necessary to be outside during times when mosquitoes are active;

using a mosquito repellent that contains DEET (the chemical N-Ndiethyl-metatoluamide), following label directions. DEET can be toxic if overused. Never use DEET on infants. Avoid using repellents with DEET concentrations above 10-15 percent for children and with concentrations above 30-35 percent for adults. Cream, lotion or stick formulas are best. Avoid products with high amounts of alcohol.

At this time, there is no vaccine available for (WNV), which Godzik describes as normally like a "mild case of the flu." Mild WNV infections cause fever, headache and body aches, often accompanied by a skin rash and swollen lymph glands. People with a low immune-system such as young children, elderly, those on anti-rejection drug therapy or have an immune deficiency problem can be victim to more severe infections. Symptoms can include headaches, high fever, neck stiffness, stupor, disorientation, coma, tremors, convulsions paralysis and sometimes death.

Standing water can breed mosquitoes. Therefore it's important to get rid of any around the home or in a neighborhood. Mosquitoes will breed in any puddle or standing water that remains more than four days.

To avoid providing conditions that could lead to mosquito breeding, the board of health offers a number of suggestions:

dispose of or regularly empty any metal cans, plastic containers, ceramic pots, birdbaths, children's pools, trashcans and any other containers holding water that are located outside; pay special attention to discarded tires, which are common places for mosquitoes to breed; drill holes in recycling containers left outdoors to allow them to drain; turn over plastic wading pools and wheelbarrows when not in use;

don't allow water to stagnate in birdbaths; aerate ornamental ponds or stock them with fish; keep swimming pools clean and properly chlorinated; remove standing water from pool covers; use landscaping to eliminate standing water that collects on a property.

Residents who find dead crows or have questions are urged to contact the Cohasset Board of Health at 383-4116. If a bird is found over the weekend, residents should call the hotline at 1-877-603-3572.The state laboratory will only accept birds — ones that have died recently, do not have maggots or flies on them, have visible eyes and have not been killed by trauma or other animals. Of the 73 birds found with WNV from Sept. 5-12, 65 were American crows, five blue jays, two sparrows and

Mary Anne McKenna, who made a brief congratulatory appearance, and independent candidate Walter Murray, would be a "fall classic," and said he will be calling on his small army of volunteers again. "We're going to run a positive race on the issues, and we're going to tell this district, if given the chance, we're going to do a great job."

Holden said though a lot was made of the two men's similarities — both are 30-something lawyers from Hingham with young families — one similarity that was not focused on was the strong support network of families and friends the two campaigns had. He said the upcoming race was a very important one that will be based on issues.

"When the other side is talking about taking away their Second Amendment rights, we're going to be advocating gun control," he said. "When they're talking about rolling the taxes back, we're going to be talking about priorities."

Despite the loss, Holden said he was "very happy to have participated in this race."

Afterwards, Bradley said he is going to continue knocking on doors, this time reaching out to Republicans and independents.

He said he was surprised by the margin of victory, but said it was a result of a lot of hard work. "I hope we can continue to work hard and get as good results in November," said Bradley.

Regarding the strong showing despite the low voter turnout, he said, "We had a block of votes we worked to identify, and we worked hard to get them out."

According to campaign manager Michael Salerno, the campaign knew it had the votes needed to win, so the strategy was just to get that voting block out to the polls. "We did some calling today, we did some calling yesterday," said Salerno. According to a report on WATD radio, volunteers were working the phone in Bradley headquarters as late as two hours before the polls closed at 8 p.m. Salerno said Tuesday morning he ran into a woman at the Fruit Center in Hingham who told him she was for Bradley, but hadn't voted because she was confident he was going to win. "I said to her that's the attitude that's going to have us lose, and we need every vote we can get. I said it's a tight race, Mike [Holden] worked hard, we worked hard and she said, 'Alright I'm going down to the polls'. So I think it was pretty effective that we said to people, this isn't going to be a blowout race we thought it was going to be.

"It was a tight race. It came down to the wire."

Afterwards, Holden was very conciliatory. "I thought it was a very well run campaign, with tremendously committed people who ran the campaign. I've built some of the strongest relationships...It's a situation where you not only find out who your friends are, but to what great lengths people will go."

Mike Holden, right, congratulates Garrett Bradley on his victory in the race for the Democratic nomination to fill Mary Jeanette Murray's seat at the State House.

Though he was naturally disappointed in the end result, he thought "the race was run perfectly. We couldn't have done anything more."

Holden's plans for the future are small but important. "Tomorrow I have to go shopping with my son for a basketball hoop. That's a promise he committed me to weeks ago — the day after the primary that we'd go get a basketball hoop."

for run for state Rep. Mary Jeanette's seat, that likely drew more to the polls. In Duxbury only 9 percent of the voters cast ballots and Braintree was barely better with a 10 percent voter participation.

Tears and hugs greeted LeClair's concession speech from his campaign headquarters in Weymouth.

The cranberry bog owner and former Naval officer, told the gathering that one of the things he used to tell his men in the Navy is that there are things you can control in your life and things you can't, but when you give it your all, you can feel good about yourself.

"When running against someone who has been entrenched for 16 years and working in campaigns, it is difficult to overcome," LeClair said to his supporters. "You people have delivered a debt of honor that I probably couldn't repay in a lifetime."

LeClair also praised Cantwell, an environmental attorney who now lives in Weymouth.

"I want to offer my congratulations to my opponent Jim Cantwell. They ran a positive campaign on the high road," LeClair said.

LeClair urged his supporters to rally behind Cantwell in the upcoming battle with Hedlund.

"He (Hedlund) doesn't speak for us when we need to be spoken for, and he doesn't fight for us when we need to be fought for," LeClair said.

The party unity shown by LeClair may have contributed to his loss. LeClair failed to distinguish himself from Cantwell on any major issue. The candidates stood together on all major issues, perhaps seeking not to create a chink in the Democratic armor in the upcoming battle for Beacon Hill.

In the Sept. 11 debate sponsored by Community Newspaper Company at the Winslow House in Marshfield, LeClair's one claim to distinction was that he was an alternative to the lawyers who make up the majority of the legislators on Beacon Hill.

LeClair's stand that "we need a state Senate with a broader perspective" did not win out over Cantwell's assertion that his "17 years of public service as assistant district attorney, selectman, legislative aide, and congressional aide" gave him the skill and experience to work effectively for the residents in the district.

At Cantwell's headquarters LaRossa Hall in South Weymouth the atmosphere was jubilant as results trickled in. There were a lot of handshakes and pats on the back when Cantwell's victory was assured.

State Senate candidates Jim Cantwell, left, and Ted LeClair greet each other outside the polls in Marshfield on Tuesday.

"Ted LeClair ran a fantastic campaign," said Cantwell. "There were positive discussions, with priorities being education, health care reform, and protecting quality of life. We both decided to run because we saw the ineffectiveness of the current state Senator," Cantwell said.

As he edges closer to the November election, Cantwell said he'll stay focused on the issues important to the residents in the district.

"I will address the serious issues facing the South Shore," Cantwell said. "I'm excited with the support from the eight towns. This will continue being an issue-based campaign and convincing people for change. I have a passion to do things to help people. I've been working 16 years volunteering to preserve open space."

Both Cantwell and LeClair had pledged throughout their campaigns to stand together against Hedlund, no matter who won the primary.

Rail foes rally against the MBTA in North Scituate

By Liz Lawrence

More than 500 residents from Scituate and other South Shore towns gathered Sunday to tell Gov. Cellucci and the MBTA they don't want to see the Greenbush train cross their tracks.

With "no train" and "de-rail Cellucci" signs in hand, protestors of the proposed Silver restoration of the old railroad cut line applauded the passing traffic and chanted anti-train slogans during the four-hour rally. Scituate Log 2000, held on North Scituate Common.

The rally named after the famous Boston Tea Party was a last minute effort to get the governor's attention prior to Tuesday's meeting at the Statehouse with officials from several Greenbush communities.

Scituate shares with other town residents from Cohasset, Braintree, Weymouth and Hingham all look apart to the town's rail line.

Although 1,000 were expected for the tea party, rally organizers were pleased with the turnout.

And while most of the crowd assembled to voice their opposition to the train, some Greenbush supporters in the area made themselves known too.

Cohasset resident Kenneth Jason brought his own placard to the event. It read, "We need the train. 3A is a pain."

"I want the train to go through," Jason said.

He said it would help free up the traffic congestion on Route 3A. Ann Burbine, another Greenbush supporter and business owner in North Scituate, said she like Jason, wants to see the commuter rail return to Scituate.

"I think the anticipation of the event will far out strip its reality," said Burbine.

Burbine said that as a community Scituate has to learn how to be adaptable to change. She said she knows that there will be some changes with the parking and pick-up and deliveries in the area, but it would all be, "resolvable."

But Burbine and Jason were outnumbered by rail foes Sunday.

On North Scituate Common residents and even local legislators were of a different mind and they spoke their minds loudly.

State Sen. Bob Hedlund, R-Weymouth, who has long opposed the Greenbush line was one of the first to step up to the microphone at the rally.

"I've seen a lot of projects get funded, but none that come this close to being more of a financial waste," said Hedlund. "Let's get real," and put together a list of alternatives."

Hedlund offered expanded commuter boat service as an alternative to the train, a suggestion that the protestors applauded loudly.

"If the Bates sisters could stop the British, we can stop the train," read a sign harking back to Scituate's historic past when the daughters of Scituate's first light keeper helped fend off a British invasion by playing loudly on their fife and drum.

Other things like protecting the town's environment and resources were on the minds of many at the rally.

"Save our water," yelled one woman in the crowd.

Kathy Donahue, one of the rally's organizers, said that if the proposed rotary on 123 was a part of the MBTA's plan, it was too close to Scituate's Old Oaken Bucken reservoir, and posed a threat to the town's water supply.

North Scituate business owner Susan Maheras brought up another potential threat to the town —the economy of its business districts.

"This state plan will effectively destroy this thriving village of commerce and community," she said.

Maheras said the train was coming as a, "sacrifice of the many, for the convenience of the few."

Hedlund was presented with a petition with 1,000 signatures of residents opposed to the train to present to the governor.

Kenny Ohlund, a local student who has researched the MBTA's plans told the crowd that the Greenbush train would also create safety problems for school buses. Ohlund said buses in Scituate would have to ride over train crossings 134 times a day. In Hingham, buses would cross the tracks at least 226 times, he said.

Ohlund said that the MBTA proposes putting up quadrant gates as a safety measure near these crossings. The gates would be $20 million each, said Ohlund.

But the mitigation Mark Fenton said he wanted most to see was to "take the Greenbush line off the table."

Fenton said that there was a traffic congestion problem for sure, but it was, "absurd to make a 19th century train to serve a 20th century problem." Fenton criticized the MBTA for proposing to use a diesel train rather than one powered by safer, non-polluting electricity.

Fenton urged town officials to take legal action.

"It's time to say to the governor and MBTA, see you in court," said Fenton.

Randy Young of Hingham, co-founder of the anti-train Coastal Coalition pumped the crowd up from the podium next and had the crowd chanting "no way" to the train.

Planning board member Bill Limbacher spoke out against the project as a resident, telling the governor to "listen to the people, not the engineers." Limbacher predicted the death of local businesses as a result of the return of rail service.

"The T is threatening to the very quality of life in town," he said

The rally wrapped up with more chanting from the crowd: "Cellucci ain't no friend of mine, because he supports the Greenbush line."

Governor says Greenbush a go

standing outside the governor's corner office next to Sec. Sullivan. Hedlund said he believed all the Greenbush curious towns were on the same page. "There's been a high level of frustration which is why this meeting was held," he said. "Whether it's Hingham, East Braintree or Scituate, there are similar impacts and similar concerns that these communities have we still have a long way to go before we're satisfied."

Hedlund added though he was suspicious about Cellucci and Sec. Sullivan's claim that proper mitigation could be reached while maintaining the $408 million price tag, he said all mitigation requests put on the table are needed and are not there "just to stake out a bargaining position."

Sec. Sullivan said the state is currently going through the required permitting process with the Massachusetts Environmental Protection Agency, which will require the state to provide a certain basic level of environmental mitigation.

"But the fact is, this train is getting built. This administration is committed to this train," he added. "It is the third leg of restoration of commuter rail service. It's not a new, novel idea. It's something that was taken away from us in 1959 and we're looking to restore it in 2005.

"How we get to do that is now my mission."

The MBTA has already restored commuter rail lines to Plymouth and Middleboro.

Cohasset selectman Michael Sullivan had mixed feelings about the meeting.

"They heard our frustrations with the mitigation process and acknowledged they have to do a better job," he said, adding, "There was deaf ear to the overall philosophical or safety issues affecting restoration of this train."

Callahan said the governor was very clear in saying his support of the Greenbush project was not up for reconsideration, but set $408 as a threshold he doesn't want to go above in restoring the train.

"What I'm unsure about is, does that mean there is going to be a limit on the amount of mitigation you can get mitigation you can get?" Callahan asked.

He added that a participant's feelings on how the meeting went was dependent on what their purpose at the meeting was. For Callahan, who was there hoping to get a promise for "good faith negotiations" from Cellucci, he was satisfied. "From a mitigation point, that's all you can hope for, to get someone on top to direct those beneath them to get involved in negotiations.

"If you went into the meeting against Greenbush, I don't think you came out happy."

Scituate Selectman Joseph Norton said he left the State House feeling the state believes the good of the region outweighs negative impacts of any one community.

Also in attendance were Katharine Reardon, from Hingham, two representatives each from Braintree and Weymouth, House Transportation Chairman Joseph Sullivan, D-Braintree, and Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray, R-Cohasset.

Callahan said the overall mood of the meeting was good, with plenty of opinions spoken. "It's fair to say everyone was not shy about expressing their opinions, they were very forthright...there were no shrinking violets in the room."

Tourist trap not part of village vision

Inn has just 15 rooms that he said are rented out mainly for relatives or parents visiting in town. Instead, he "just wants to tidy [the village area] up a little."

"We've run the [village area] into the ground. That's why I renovated the Red Lion because I couldn't stand to look at it any more. I just want to clean [the village area] up and not make it something grandiose."

Specific areas Ordeleheide mentioned that need fixing were the sidewalks and the lights.

Roy, when asked what "master plan" was governing his involvement, said he has no big scheme or master plan, and instead just wanted to fix things that "need to be fixed."

He said it is up to the town to ultimately decide what gets done. He saw himself as a concerned resident getting involved and wished other residents, instead of being "naysayers," would get involved also.

A big question asked was, is the purpose of the CRC to "reinvent" what Cohasset Village and Harbor should look like, or just "fix it up."

Cecil said his group's goal was to work towards building a community-wide consensus of what needs to be looked at and improved, and then bring choices of how to accomplish it to Cohasset.

"We need to agree to what the priorities are so we can go ahead in mutual good faith," Cecil said.

He said his group has been known to lay down sections of brick sidewalks, or install different watt and color street light bulbs, or temporarily change traffic patterns so people can choose what they like and what they don't.

Thomas Callahan, chairman of the board of selectmen, was asked how the board was approaching the CRC. He said the board has its "antennae up" and though it will be holding the CRC's "feet to the fire," Callahan said the board wasn't going to "just reject it out of hand."

"Anything done will be a public works project effort affecting public structures," he said, adding that any proposals would have to not only come before selectmen, but also more than likely have to go before a town meeting.

Cecil said his group is still analyzing the village area, such as looking at existing traffic patterns, parking conditions in the town lot and will look at possibly creating a visual link between the village and the post office on Ripley Road, and try to figure out how to better prevent cars from partly blocking sidewalks. He hopes to have a full report ready in two to three weeks.

Another public forum is scheduled for October, said Dean Rizzo, executive director of the CRC.

Village revitalization has been a long-discussed issue in town. The Village Renaissance Committee originally took up the task of beautifying the village. The committee's efforts included installing the town water pump in front of Cohasset Hardware. The town formed a Village Revitalization Task Force several years ago, which Rizzo actually chaired until this spring, but it folded from a lack of members. It was recently reestablished by selectmen to work with the CRC, and be a go-between for selectmen and the non-profit group.

Heroin arrests made

Following an investigation, police made a traffic stop and arrested two on heroin charges Sept. 8 near North Main and Cedar streets. Arrested were Sandra L. Towle, 50, and Louis G. Dimitri, Jr., 41, both of 91 S. Main St.

Dimitri was charged with possession of a Class A substance (heroin) and Towle was charged with being knowingly present where heroin was being kept. The suspects were arraigned on the charges Sept. 11 with a further court date set for Oct. 18.

Police found eight clear, plastic bags containing a white powdery substance thought to be heroin on the floor on the passenger side of the vehicle where Dimitri had been sitting. The bags were folded in a way that is unique to the heroin trade and held together with a rubber band in an open pack of cigarettes, police said.

Lab results on the substance were not yet available.

Police arrest 11 in August

August was a fairly busy month for the Cohasset Police Department. There were 11 arrests, one for disturbing the peace, two for operating a motor vehicle after license is suspended, one for assault and battery, four for possession of Class D substance, one for operating under the influence, one for kidnapping and finally, one for failure to stop for a police officer, police chief Brian Noonan said.

Also for the month of August there were seven criminal complaints issued and/or applied.

During the month of August the police department investigated 20 motor vehicle accidents, five of which resulted in injuries. There were 146 motor vehicle citations issued, totaling $4,855 in fines. Additionally, there were 178 parking tickets issued for $4,675 in fines.

Finally in the month of August our Emergency Dispatch Center received a total of 717 calls for police services, of those 135 were emergency 911 calls, Noonan said.

3A site, Osgood School land eyed for senior housing project

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@NC.COM

Cohasset's Senior Housing Committee has abandoned the idea of using the 1929 wing of the old Osgood School for senior housing, but is instead eyeing the triangular section of the property bordering Sohier Street.

At the same time, the Cohasset Housing Authority is hoping to pick up a four-acre parcel of town-owned land behind Jonathan Livingston Square on Route 3A as a place to build moderate income housing for seniors.

The former Osgood School on the corner of Sohier Street and Ripley Road is slated to be renovated into the new town library, with the 1929 wing remaining unused. The senior housing committee had originally expressed interest in constructing senior housing units in that wing. But Selectman Ronnie McMorris said after a walk through with Steve Dubuque of the South Shore Housing Authority, the committee no longer saw it as a viable option.

"We walked through and [Dubuque] really thought it would be cost prohibitive, and didn't think we'd end up with enough units and that it was not necessarily compatible with the [library]," said McMorris. "So we laid the idea to rest."

She said the committee had now turned its attention to the undeveloped triangular section of the school's property as a possible site for much-needed senior housing. But, like the space inside the Osgood School, the committee needs to see if enough housing units could be built on the site to make the project economically feasible.

Federal funds are almost essential to the project because without it, the cost of building such a complex would add millions of dollars to an already over-stretched town budget.

The Cohasset Housing Authority hopes to partake in the Chapter 202 Housing Grant program that provides federal money for the construction of moderate and low-income housing.

The CHA wants the town to convey a 4.8 acre parcel of land between the Rose Hill development and Jonathan Livingston Square in order to build the units. The land known as Orcutt Pasture was donated to the town by the Nichols Family in 1900, said Town Manager Mark Haddad, who put the transfer request on the warrant for the special fall town meeting next month.

Two problems that potentially exist, according to John Muncey of the CHA, is if the land is even buildable, and if it is, because the program is federally funded, Cohasset residents won't have preference for placement in the housing.

Muncey said an excavator is needed to come onto the property and conduct tests to see if the land is restricted by the Cohasset granite ledge, or if construction is possible.

But Muncey warned, if the town was to go through with the project, the CHA would have to make sure any Cohasset residents interested in the first-come, first-serve housing are prepared. "They will have to get up early that morning," he said. "Cohasset has to be on the ball and be ready."

McMorris said it would be a great piece of property "if we could give residents preference." She said any interested parties will "have to have done their homework."

Federal funds are almost essential to the project because without it, the cost of building such a complex would add millions of dollars to an already over-stretched town budget. Another option would be to deed over some of the units to a developer in exchange for a deal building them. But according to Muncey, because the amount of units built would be small, "it would be tight for a contractor to come in and get his share."

The fall special Town Meeting is scheduled for Oct. 23 at 7:30 p.m. at the Middle/High School.

Handgun violence

Stop Handgun Violence of the South Shore will conduct a forum at 7:30 p.m., Oct. 5, at Walton Roger's Hall at St. Stephen's Episcopal Church in Cohasset, to continue the education and debate about the responsibility of ensuring safe and proper handling of guns so children will not fall victim to handgun violence. Speakers will be announced in the next issue.

Office hours at CRC

The Cohasset Revitalization Corporation announces the following office hours:

Monday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday: 10 am – 4 p.m.
Tuesday: 12 –8 p.m.
Saturday: 9 am–1 p.m.
And by appointment.

The CRC seeks community involvement in the effort to establish consensus driven visions and planning documents to improve the infrastructure of the village and harbor. For further information call 383-2449.

Runway opposed

After a presentation by resident Eric Oddleifson, Selectmen voted Sept. 12 to oppose construction of Runway 14/32, the proposed new runway at Logan International Airport. In a letter to Cohasset's legislative delegation, Town Manager Mark Haddad said selectmen feel the new runway would adversely impact Cohasset and the South Shore.

Cohasset is about 12 miles from Logan Airport and the proposed runway would cause additional traffic projected to be 23,000 flights annually, Haddad stated.

"This will create a very substantial noise impact across the South Shore, which, in turn, causes the South Shore to have the largest environmental impact created anywhere by the project," Haddad stated. "However, the South Shore had been largely ignored by Massport and the Federal Aviation Administration."

Haddad urged the town's elected representatives to do everything in their power to oppose construction of the runway.

Officer commended

Police Chief Brian Noonan commended Officer William Quigley for his "superb investigative skills" that enabled him to identify a suspect in a kidnapping incident in a short period of time. The arrest occurred last month after a clerk at Mobil Mart alerted police that a distressed woman at the convenience store needed assistance. Investigation revealed the woman had been forced into a car in Hull and allegedly assaulted by the suspect who left her at the Cohasset store. The suspect was subsequently arrested at his home in Norwell.

"Your attention to detail, and perseverance resulted in the timely apprehension of this subject," Noonan said.

"Your professionalism and dedication is one that I am extremely proud of," Noonan said. "This type of credit brings credit to yourself, your department and the law enforcement community."

Patricia McCarthy show on display in Duxbury gallery through Oct. 31

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

Cohasset artist Patricia McCarthy is hoping her new watercolor exhibit will make a splash.

More than 30 of her landscape watercolor works are on display through Halloween at the Helen Bumpus Gallery in the Duxbury Free Library.

"I was told two years ago that I would have my own show there," McCarthy said, "so I had two years to prepare for it." McCarthy explained that one of her friends convinced her to send some of her work to the Helen Bumpus Gallery a few years ago. McCarthy was accepted right off the bat, but she was given plenty of time to prepare for the show.

Patricia McCarthy

"There's about 36 pieces (of art work) in my show," McCarthy said. "Some of them I had on hand, but some of the pieces are ones I've done over the past two years of preparing for the show. They're all watercolors."

McCarthy said most of her watercolor paintings involve landscapes from various regions of the world—she said at her current show, people can view landscapes of Boston, Cohasset, Maine, and even Florida, where McCarthy spends most of her winters.

But her landscape paintings involve some more exotic places as well.

"The show features five or six paintings I did while I was in Ireland," she said. "I actually went there specifically for the purpose of painting. I also have some paintings at the show that I did while I was in Italy three years ago."

"I got some really good feedback from people when the show opened," McCarthy said. "And people are still letting me know what they think of my work." McCarthy is no stranger to artistic feedback—she said she's been featured in two or three other "one-man art shows" around the South Shore, and "a couple of other group shows in Boston."

McCarthy said watercolor is the only medium for her. She said she experimented with mediums like acrylics and oils when she attended the Art Institute in Boston, but in the end, watercolors stole the show.

"I just fell in love with it immediately," she said.

But more than the medium itself, it is art overall which appeals to McCarthy.

"Painting just takes me out of my own life for a while," she said. "I can escape from the craziness of the world for just a few hours. I love color, and I love looking to the great outdoors to find different kinds of colors. With watercolors, I'm able to bring out luminosity in my work, and to me, there's nothing more exciting then applying fresh paint over white paper. Sometimes I find a painting can actually paint itself."

McCarthy got seriously involved with painting about 25 years ago. She had children, which indirectly helped in choosing her watercolor medium.

"One of my kids used to get covered in oil paint," she said. "That kind of helped me get turned on to watercolors. But 25 years ago, art was always in the back of my mind because of my schooling. I knew painting was a learned craft, so I just started working on it."

"I don't like conveying subliminal messages in my work. Watercolor isn't a medium for political and social issues—it's a medium to show explosions of color."
Patricia McCarthy

McCarthy said she began studying with some area artists at the time, and she also said she started taking painting classes at the Ellis House in Scituate.

As time went on, McCarthy started developing her craft. Her work began to take shape, and eventually, she started to get very good at what she was doing. She got so good at it that 10 years ago, she began teaching her own class at the South Shore Art Center in Cohasset, where she still teaches today.

When it comes to what McCarthy thinks a good painting is she said "A big part of coming up with a good painting has to do with knowing your subject well. It's also about using a good combination of darks and lights and using color that's fresh and clean."

McCarthy said a good painting should also be innovative. For example, McCarthy said in her traditional landscape paintings, she tries to focus on certain structures, rather than just given landscapes.

"You've got to try to do things that are unique," she said.

But McCarthy said the public can judge for themselves. She said she hopes people on the South Shore will find time to check out her show and be inspired by it.

"I think people will really enjoy the colors in my work," she said. "Colors give people good feelings." She added she believes the public will enjoy her level of artistic simplicity.

"I don't like conveying subliminal messages in my work," she said. "Watercolor isn't a medium for political and social issues—it's a medium to show explosions of color."

For more information on McCarthy's show, call (781) 934-2721. The exhibit is located on the main floor of the Duxbury Free Library on 77 Alden Street. Admission is free.

Norwell's Company Theatre welcomes Livingston Taylor Sept. 23

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

Livingston Taylor is excited about many aspects of his life.

He is excited about his 11th year of teaching at the Berklee College of Music in Boston.

He is excited about his most recent album "Snapshot," released in 1999 and he is also excited about his new book called "Stage Performance" published in the spring.

Most of all, he is excited about his Sept. 23 show at The Company Theatre in Norwell.

"I love playing there," Taylor says. "It's a lovely facility. You bet I'm psyched to get there, because I've played there a number of times, and it's always been great."

Like his older brother James, Livingston has a deep appreciation for music. He has released a total of 14 albums since 1970, and he is in the process of putting a new one together. He hopes to start recording the new album in late fall, but he said he will most likely begin next spring.

His current tour began this month, but if you ask him, he'll tell you otherwise.

"This tour started in 1969," Taylor quips. "And it's scheduled for completion in the year 2047. After that, I'll take a couple of months off." Taylor's current tour will run through April 2000 that's probably not long enough for him.

"Seriously, I love touring," he says. "I just go out there and get really into it—it's what I do."

When he's not on stage, Taylor is at the head of the class teaching his stage performance course at Berklee. His new book is focused on that very subject.

"The book basically talks about how one is supposed to go about being an entertainer on stage," he says. "It talks about what a performer's responsibilities are, and what audiences expect from them. I had a great time writing the book, but I also have a great time teaching the class."

Taylor says he has some terrific memories of his career in music, but he doesn't like focusing on the past.

"I've been playing music for a very long time," he says. "There have been a lot of highlights, but I don't usually think back on them. For me, the real highlights are my immediate surroundings—those highlights would include being back with my students and tour-

Folk fest growing fast

All-day Boston Folk Festival set for Saturday

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

The Boston Folk Festival has grown quickly in its short three-year history.

Sponsored by WUMB-FM (91.9) at UMass/Boston, the BFF debuted in 1998 as an afternoon-long event with a relative handful of performers and scattered stage locations in its then temporary venue in and around the Boston Common. The next year the festival moved to additional evening hours as well as its now permanent home, on the campus of UMass/Boston at Dorchester harbor.

The first festival in '98 headlined legendary folk/blues songstress Odetta, but otherwise its bill was mainly a collection of local and regional folk/acoustic-based performers which showcased fine musical diversity but not too much in the way of headline-grabbing names. Last year's follow up event brought a similarly impressive, but wider and more diverse array of artists, though once again not including too many household names, except, of course, in the folkiest of households. Cheryl Wheeler, Richard Shindell, Katy Moffatt and Stacey Earle were among the more recognized featured performers.

For 2000, the BFF in only its third year is arrived at the best of both worlds — a permanent host venue and world-class headline performers. The 3rd Annual Boston Folk Festival takes over the UMass/Boston Harbor Campus, this Saturday for an all-day and all-evening concert from 11 a.m. to 11 p.m.

This year's bill is topped by three major headliners — singer/songstylist and Woodstock veteran Richie Havens, ex-Byrds mastermind and longtime solo artist Roger McGuinn, and British Richie Havens, Greg Greenway and Cheryl Wheeler will all perform during Saturday's all-day and night Boston Folk Festival at UMASS Boston.

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

Old-Fashioned Chocolate Frosting

One of the reasons that I will always have a special place in my heart (and stomach) for Larry Forgione's New York restaurant, An American Place, is that the menu always includes a rich devil's food cake with chocolate frosting. Forget the plum sorbet with a hint of kaffir lime, skip the seven-layer almond torte served in a spun-sugar cage. Give me a thick, luxurious chocolate frosting any day of the week, and I'm your friend for life.

Of course, making one that is thick, chocolatey, and not too sweet isn't as simple as it sounds. I made five recipes from various cookbooks and concluded the following: unsweetened chocolate makes for inferior flavor, confectioners' sugar can be overpowering and should be used in modest quantities, and the addition of butter produces the smoothest texture. The basic preparation method was to melt the chocolate along with cream, cool the mixture, and then whip it with sugar.

My first experiment with mixing methods was to incorporate room-temperature butter instead of melting it with the chocolate and cream. I started the recipe by heating the cream in a small saucepan until bubbling around the edges. Next, I took the pan from the heat, added the chopped chocolate and let it sit covered for five minutes. I then whisked the mixture until combined and transferred it to a mixing bowl. At this point I allowed the mixture to cool to room temperature. I then added the butter (cool room temperature and cut into chunks), as well as corn syrup (instead of confectioners' sugar), and vanilla and beat the mixture with an electric mixer. While I loved the fresher taste of the butter, the frosting was too bitter. I added one more tablespoon of corn syrup, but the frosting was still not sweet enough. Reluctantly, I decided that confectioners' sugar was the answer, so I started adding it in increments of one tablespoon. Six tablespoons was just right.

Next, I adjusted the level of chocolate and settled on 10 ounces. I tried reducing the butter to 6 tablespoons, but the frosting wasn't as smooth in taste or texture. When tested with 10 tablespoons butter, however, the frosting began to taste like a buttercream so I settled on 8 tablespoons. I tested the recipe with less cream and found it difficult to incorporate the chocolate, but using more cream also presented problems. The mixture was too thin, it took longer to cool to a spreadable consistency, and the flavor suffered. I finally settled on 3/4 cup heavy cream.

With the basic formula settled, I wanted to test different brands of chocolate to see how this would affect the quantity of sugar needed. It turned out that the brand does matter so I have written the recipe to allow for varying amounts of sugar. Add a quarter cup of confectioners' sugar to start, taste the frosting, and then add more in one tablespoon increments as necessary. This recipe depends heavily on the quality of the chocolate — if you don't like the taste of it out of the wrapper, you won't like the frosting either. Purchase the best brand you can find and don't settle for a cheap supermarket chocolate. In blind taste tests, I always prefer Callebaut although Ghirardelli is also highly recommended. (Among supermarket chocolates, I find that Baker's is better than Hershey's.)

OLD FASHIONED CHOCOLATE FROSTING

This recipe keeps well in an airtight container for up to two days, just re-whip it before icing the cake. To re-whip, allow it to sit out on the counter for about 20 minutes (the weather will have something to do with this) until it reaches a cool room temperature and then beat with an electric mixer until it achieves a spreadable consistency. I prefer this frosting with a basic yellow or white cake.

3/4 cup heavy cream
8 tablespoons bittersweet or semi-sweet chocolate, coarsely chopped
1/4 cup corn syrup
8 tablespoons unsalted butter at a cool room temperature, cut into 1-inch chunks
1/2 teaspoon vanilla extract
1/4 to 1/ cup confectioners' sugar

1. Place the cream in a small saucepan over low heat until it is just simmering and small bubbles form around the edges of the pan. Remove from the heat; add the chocolate, cover, and let sit for 5 minutes. Remove cover and whisk mixture until homogeneous, shiny, and smooth. Transfer to a mixing bowl and allow to cool to room temperature.

2. To the bowl add the corn syrup, butter, and vanilla and beat with an electric mixer until well combined, about 1 minute. Add 1/4 cup confectioners' sugar and beat on low to combine. Increase the speed to high and continue mixing for about 5 minutes more or until the mixture has lightened in color and texture and thickened to a spreadable consistency. Taste for sweetness. Add the remaining confectioners' sugar in 1 tablespoon increments as necessary to achieve desired sweetness. If the icing will not whip to a light, spreadable consistency, refrigerate for 15 minutes and try again. Repeat the above step until the frosting whips. Makes about 4 cups, enough to frost an 8- or 9-inch two-layer cake.

MILK CHOCOLATE VARIATION

This recipe, which is even lighter than the master recipe, must be made with a delicious milk chocolate. (Taste a piece of the chocolate before using.) I found that this variation works well without either vanilla or confectioner's sugar. I like this frosting on basic yellow cake.

Follow the master recipe, substituting milk chocolate for semisweet, omitting the vanilla and confectioners' sugar. This recipe makes about 3 1/2 cups frosting.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 20

It may be difficult to focus on practical matters today. Pay extra attention to details so that you don't overlook something significant. The moon travels in Gemini, active until 9:28 p.m. All social activities are highlighted. You can make gains developing projects that need help or support from others. The last quarter phase of the moon occurs at 9:28 p.m. This moon decreases in light until September 27, when the new moon occurs.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 21

This is the last full day of summer. The Autumnal Equinox arrives tomorrow. That means that new starts are off limits. Instead, plan to finish projects already begun, handle routine chores and errands. The moon enters the sign Cancer at 12:16 a.m. Focus on family and domestic responsibilities. Give children, elderly, pets extra time and attention; follow through on promises you have made. Plan a quiet evening.

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 22

The moon continues to travel in family-oriented Cancer. The big event today is the Autumnal Equinox. At 1:28 p.m. the sun enters Libra, remaining there until October 22. It is okay to initiate new activities between 1:28-11:58 p.m., when the Cancer moon becomes inactive. Share a special dinner with close friends and family this evening.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 23

Today's planetary influences rate high across the board. The moon enters Leo at 2:59 a.m., generating an upbeat mood. If you are working, you can be most productive. The best time for launching ventures occurs between 10:00-10:43 a.m., when the sun forms a harmonious contact to Saturn. On the other hand, this is a great day for relaxing and enjoying favorite leisure activities and friends. A lunar alignment to Jupiter promises an exciting evening. Put on your party hat and let the good times roll.

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 24

A lunar alignment to Uranus may generate extra excitement this morning. The moon continues to travel in playful Leo, active until 9:33 p.m. The planet Venus moves into Scorpio at 11:26 a.m., remaining there until October 19. Today's influences are similar to yesterday's. You can be most productive, if you have work projects to accomplish. It is okay to initiate new projects between 12:00-9:33 p.m. Be sure to take time out for fun and games. This is a great day to relax and unwind.

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 25

Gear up for a hectic day. The moon enters Virgo at 5:02 a.m. and forms challenging alignments to Saturn in the morning, Mars in the afternoon and Pluto in the evening. Stress management is important. Don't worry about situations that are out of your control. Instead, roll up your sleeves and take on a full work agenda. You can be most productive, if you keep your nose to the grindstone. At 11:44 p.m. the moon forms its last major alignment to a planet and becomes inactive.

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 26

This is a day to finish projects already begun, clean out, reorganize and get ready for new starts. Sidestep self-doubts, fears, worry. The Virgo moon is inactive all day. A new moon will culminate tomorrow. A harmonious alignment of the sun and Neptune highlights all creative endeavors. Take extra time out for prayer and meditation. You can gain key insights and find new meanings in life.

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 27

This may be a slow-starting morning. The final stage of the new moon begins at 7:22 a.m., when the moon enters Libra. Venus, the planetary ruler of Libra, forms a 90-degree alignment to Neptune at 3:34 p.m. Things may not go as planned. Others may be careless, forgetful, late for appointments. This influence is favorable for developing projects that need creativity and imagination. However, this is not a time to make practical decisions or commitments. Influences turn around completely at 3:53 p.m., when the new moon culminates at 5-degrees Libra. At this time the green light for new starts goes on.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 28

New beginnings across the board are recommended between 9:28 a.m.-12:57 p.m. You can make great strides toward personal or professional goals. The Libra moon continues active travel until 12:57 p.m., when it forms a harmonious contact to Uranus. Mercury moves into Scorpio at 9:28 a.m. Mercury will begin retrograde travel next month, when it reaches 15-degrees of Scorpio. The evening is prime for a social gathering or romantic rendezvous.

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 29

The giant planet Jupiter takes center stage this morning. Jupiter, standing at 11-degrees Gemini, begins retrograde travel at 8:53 a.m. Its influence adds an upbeat, optimistic mood to this time period. The Libra moon is inactive until 11:29 a.m., when it enters Scorpio. Take time out for yourself this morning. Focus on personal issues. Put recent losses, crises behind you; set new intentions and goals. If you carefully organize your time, you can be most productive this afternoon. A lunar alignment to Neptune between 4:25-7:25 p.m. may bring a lull period in the day. Enjoy a quiet evening with the love in your life.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 30

A Scorpio moon makes this a day to get things done. Focus on projects you've left on the back burner. You can get them out of the way in short time. Others may be moody, pensive, difficult to get along with. Back off rather than stir up resentment. Keep your nose to the grindstone; hard work will pay off. The moon aligns with Uranus at 6:42 p.m. and becomes inactive for the remainder of the evening. Look within for answers and you'll find what you need to get back on track.

Folk fest is growing fast

folk/rock legends Steeleye Span, making a rare U.S. appearance for the folk fest.

"I guess you can't get much bigger headliners than them," said Pat Monteith, General Manager at WUMB-FM and the main organizer of the Folk Fest.

"These performers are pretty much at the right level of status and price to make the festival affordable, for us as well as our customers."

Havens, McGuinn and Steeleye Span are just the closing three of a total of eleven acts performing throughout the day and evening on the Festival's Main Concert Stage, which itself is one of nine stages altogether supporting a total of 45 performers and bands encompassing over 100 musicians. One would be correct in assuming that this year's 3rd annual folk fest is the biggest and most musically generous to date.

Also appearing on the main stage over the twelve hours are performers as diverse as Northeastern contemporary folk/acoustic singer/songwriters Cheryl Wheeler, Christine Lavin and Garnet Rogers, Austin, Texas folk/country/Tex-Mex scenemakers Tish Hinojosa and Peter Rowan's Texas Trio with Tony Rice, contemporary cult-artist singers/songwriters John Gorka and Jesse Winchester and Delta-style blues singer/guitarist Josh White Jr. Concert sets will also be featured throughout the afternoon hours on five other stages, dubbed for various purposes as the Showcase, Dance, Family and Coffeehouse stages and the Harbor Cruises departing from the boat dock, and including such performers as Greg Greenway, Kim & Reggie Harris, Seamus Connelly & Cuchullan, the Gloucester Hompipe and Clog Society and many others.

In addition, there will be three Workshop and Song Swap Stages active during the afternoon, featuring individual presentations by performers such as singer/songwriter Eliza Gilkyson, Boston-based folk/blues duo Paul Rishell & Annie Raines and Irish/Celtic folk troubadour Robbie O'Connell, and musical theatre and seminar programs with title topics such as "The Delta and Beyond," "Horace Greeley Was Right! Songs of the Open Sky Country," "There

But For Fortune — The Songs of Phil Ochs," "Songs I Wish I'd Written" and more. White, Rowan, Rishell & Raines, Gilkyson and Winchester will be among the many Festival artists passing through the workshops throughout the day.

"The concept of the folk festival from the beginning has been to help develop the folk music community, not only for the very active scene we have around the Boston area but also for its relationship with the national scene, and also to help introduce folk music to college students at UMass and elsewhere locally. Montieth said .It's great if someone can, for instance, come to the fest to see Richie Havens and, in the process, discover Cheryl Wheeler, or to see Peter Rowan and discover Josh White Jr."

WUMB-FM holds the distinction of being the only full-time folk-music station, commercial or non-commercial in the United States. After experimenting with various formats for a number of years, the station finally went full-time folk four years ago through help from an NPR (National Public Radio) link and longtime listener support, which Monteith said has totaled more than $400,000 from some 5,000 listeners.

"We have two basic goals with the Folk Festival," Monteith said. "One is to continue to expose folk music to more listeners. The other is to showcase its great diversity. At the station, we try to show folk music as an umbrella encompassing musical styles from blues and bluegrass to world music, Celtic music and contemporary singer/songwriters. And with the Festival, we try to display to people who come out that folk music as a genre is a whole lot more than just Peter Paul & Mary."

"The Festival is a way of giving something back to our listeners. We've found out over the years that folk music is the format for our station that seems to receive the most listener support. And as it turns out, the more folk music, the more support." Monteith said.

SOUTH SHORE REAL ESTATE

Home and Garden Television comes to the South Shore

"Lights, camera, action!" has become a common refrain in many Hingham homes this summer as film crews from Home and Garden Television (HGTV) have been in the area filming for two of their prime time shows, "Kitchen Design" and "Bed and Bath Design."

The 52-episode series will focus on New England and will start airing in October of this year. Each half-hour show features two home tours and a mini-documentary on a design topic.

The host of the shows, Joan Kohn, spent a day in July at the home of Hingham architect Sally Weston, interviewing Weston about her new kitchen and master bedroom suite.

The producers also used the Weston home to film mini-documentaries and introductions to other segments for the two shows.

"We had a great day," said Weston. "The crew and Joan were so nice and easy and fun to work with. It's exciting that the town and local design talent will get this kind of exposure."

Senior producer John Rice lives in Norwell and owns Above the Line Programming. He was hired to produce the two-season series.

The shows will also feature homes in Norwell, Scituate, Cohasset and Duxbury.

"This has been a wonderful opportunity to show off what is unique and special about the architecture, talent and people of New England," he said.

"We've been to the Cape and the Islands, the Berkshires, Stowe, Vermont and the Maine coast and everywhere in between. The show will feature a mix of old and new construction, historic renovations, contemporary designs, rooms done on a budget, and fantasy tours — all rooms with interesting design stories."

Sue Bush of Hingham was booking producer for the project. She encouraged the producers to come to Hingham.

The shows will also feature homes in Norwell, Scituate, Cohasset and Duxbury.

"It's been really rewarding to bring the shows here," she said. "The crew loves coming to Hingham. The homeowners and experts are enthusiastic and great on camera. The homes are all fabulous and the town so interesting and beautiful. It's going to be a wonderful show."

Other Hingham homeowners who will appear in the series include, Kate Dickerson, Sheila Keneally, Susan Roy and Robin Pellesier of Main Street, Beth Smith of Cottage Street, Lisa Patterson of Burditt Avenue and Grace Brown of Rice Road.

The show also features interviews with local architects, designers and builders involved in the remodeling projects.

Weston of Weston Hewittson Architects will appear with four more of her designs as well as Ben Wilcox of Wilcox Corporation; John Hallen of J.M. Hallen Associates; Peter Bargende of Faneuil Kitchens; Cameron Snyder and Gene Hester of Kitchen Concepts of Norwell; Jim Kelleher of Axiom, Norwell and Rich Lordan of Lordan Building and Remodeling of Cohasset.

Many rooms were stylized by Nanette Walsh of La Petite Maison, Hingham. She provided bed, bath and kitchen linens and accessories from her South Street shop to help homeowners with finishing touches to their rooms.

"Kitchen Design" can be seen Thursday nights at 9:30 and "Bed and Bath Design" on Saturday nights at 10:30.

Home and Garden Television is channel 32 on Media One and is seen in more than 60 million homes nationwide.

Production will continue through the fall. For more information or to submit homes for the project, call Above the Line Programming, (978) 369-5515.

IN BRIEF

Dawn Stevens of Hanson.

Technology director Toni Manning and Deborah Reilley of Hingham.

Conway staff members earn designation for proficiency

Two Jack Conway & Co. staff members received the Conway Computer Institute (CCI) designation, an honor they obtained after completing 36 hours of intensive coursework in using technology to better serve real estate customers.

Technology director Toni Manning recently awarded CCI certificates and pins to Dawn Stevens of Hanson, who manages Conway's Referral Registry, and Deborah Reilley of Hingham, the company's career counselor. Classes on creating mailing lists, managing client databases and using desktop publishing were taught by instructors from Massasoit Community College at Conway's in-house computer-training laboratory. Manning taught courses on navigating the Internet, effectively communicating with customers by e-mail and a special module on Conway's state-of-the-art information-management system.

After completing the requirements, the CCI designees received a $500 gift certificate to CompUSA, the computer superstore.

"Technology is so important in today's market," said Manning, adding that the CCI designation is believed to be the first of its kind to be offered by a real estate firm. "Dawn and Debbie have shown their commitment to education by earning this designation."

Conway's mid-year award ceremonies

Financial planner Noreen Carey-Neville and WATD-FM owner Edward Perry were the featured speakers at recent award ceremonies held by the Jack Conway & Co. real estate firm.

Carey-Neville, whose company is based in Weymouth, discussed the role of women in business, particularly the real estate industry, and was presented with a certificate of appreciation by chairman Jack Conway. Carey-Neville was the special guest at Conway's northern-region breakfast meeting at Lombardo's in Randolph.

At the southern-region meeting at the Plymouth Sheraton, WATD-FM owner Edward Perry was presented with a plaque in honor of the radio station's receipt of the Edward R. Murrow Award for Excellence. The Radio and Television News Directors Association, a national trade group, administers the award program named for Murrow, the legendary radio and television journalist. The Marshfield-based radio station also won Murrow awards for news writing and sports coverage.

"We appreciate Noreen and Ed sharing their insight and knowledge with our agents and staff," Conway said. "We value the contributions that our fellow businesspeople make to the community."

More than 60 Conway agents were recognized at the annual ceremonies, which recognize the top achievers in the company during the first half of the calendar year.

Norwell-based Jack Conway & Co., has more than 600 associates in 37 offices from Boston to Cape Cod. The company recently was named the 77th largest realty organization in the United States by Realtor® Magazine, the official publication of the National Association of Realtors.

Deeded parking cannot be severed from condo unit

BY ANTHONY SUMMERS

With the quadrennial Summer Olympics presently taking shape in Sydney, Australia, we can expect to view gymnastics at the gold medal level. However, there is no way the Olympic acrobatics can compare with the real estate legal gymnastics unsuccessfully attempted in the Land Court case of Brady v. Zimmerman, Hoag, Bell, Talanian and Sgroi.

Background

In 1988, Carlo Sgroi created a nine-unit condominium at 194 Marlborough St., Boston. The building contained six parking spaces. Sgroi conveyed Unit 1, with parking space A appurtenant to it, to his attorney, Robert Zimmerman. Then, Zimmerman gave a 99-year lease of the parking space to his secretary, Virginia Hoag. (As we all know, Back Bay parking is very expensive and almost impossible to find.). The scheme advanced as Zimmerman next sold the Unit to Colleen Brady, the plaintiff, subject to, of course, the lease held by Virginia Hoag. Eventually, the lease was sold to Jane and Charles Talanian.

Apparently, Brady and her attorney both read and understood the condominium documents. Believing she was entitled to the parking space, she brought a Land Court action to establish title to the parking space and recover damages under several theories.

Discussion of law

M.G.L. Chapter 237 deals with issues where a third party has erroneously occupied another's land. The statute requires that the third party occupier pay rent for the time the land was occupied.

A read of the 194 Condominium Trust stated that "no part of the appurtenant interest of any unit may be sold, leased…except as part of a sale of the unit to which such interest is appurtenant…" Also, it stated, "However, no unit owner, shall execute any…deed… without including therein the appurtenant interests, it being the intention hereof to prevent any severance of such combined ownership."

ANTHONY SUMMERS

Decision

Now, as you recall, at the time the condominium was formed, the parking space was clearly described as appurtenant to Unit 1. It was Attorney Zimmerman who drafted that language. And, it was also Attorney Zimmerman who attempted to separate the space from the unit when he leased the space to his secretary in clear contradiction of the condominium documents.

Here, the Court read the condominium documents and gave them their plain and simple meaning, which was that the parking space can not be separated from the unit. Therefore, the owner of Unit 1 always owned the space, and any attempt to lease the space to a third party was ineffective, as it was an attempt to sever the space from the unit.

So, Brady ends up with the space, but Talanian had the use of it for more than six years and hadn't paid Brady any rent, yet. To add insult to injury, the Talanians had counterclaimed, contending that since their leased parking space was appurtenant to Brady's unit, they owned the unit. The Court dismissed that theory as frivolous.

Well, the Court saw the clear blue sky through the smoke and mirrors. When all was said and done, the lease was declared void and Brady not only ended up with the space, but a judgment for $31,000.

Legal advice

The judgment of $31,000 was made up of $9,000 in interest, $6,000 in attorneys' fees and approximately $16,000 in rent covering a six-year period. Hopefully, the Talanians had title insurance covering their lease; otherwise, they would be out the purchase price for the lease, and $31,000, plus their own attorney's fees.

Fall Renovation of Lawns and Gardens

By Suzanne Mahler

PART 1

As I drag my sprinklers across the lawn to moisten my parched perennial gardens, a chipmunk scurries from beneath a large clump of hosta, its cheek pouches bulging with provisions for the winter months ahead. As cute and adorable as these striped little creatures may be, they are unwelcome intruders for gardeners who grow spring-flowering bulbs. Gaping holes have been evident throughout my beds all season as these aggravating rodents have persistently and systematically excavated several hundred crocus bulbs, leaving behind only remnants of the papery tunics and a few miniscule corms.

Green thumbs up

With nearly all the crocus bulbs consumed, these diminutive darlings have moved on to the scillas and the little varmints will most likely continue their frantic foraging until all but the poisonous narcissus bulbs remain or cold temperatures force them into hibernation.

Crows and skunks have been actively searching for grubs in other parts of the yard, particularly near paved surfaces, ripping and shredding the turf until the lawn looks as if it had been tilled. If your turf is being ravaged by birds and animals and a closer inspection reveals dozens of C-shaped, white grubs just beneath the surface, an application of Dylox can be spread followed by a thorough watering, although the critters do a fairly effective job of eradicating these beetle larvae. Products containing the grub control 'Merit' will not be effective this late in the season and should be applied in June to reduce or eliminate the presence of grubs next autumn.

Early September is the preferred time of year to install or renovate lawns. Warm soil temperatures facilitate the prompt germination of grass seed and Mother Nature usually assists with the important task of regular watering. With this season's cooler, damp weather, most lawns are much denser and considerably less stressed than in typical dry summers, although August was actually below normal for rainfall, and may require only minor renovations.

Removal of weeds and crabgrass, either by hand or with the aid of selective herbicides, is usually recommended prior to undertaking a major lawn project. In particularly weedy areas having very few grass plants, a broad spectrum herbicide, such as Roundup or Finale, which kills even the existing grass, may be the best course of action. If chemicals are used, be sure to read the label carefully, noting the length of time required for the herbicide to dissipate prior to seeding.

For established lawns, a vigorous raking should remove light thatch, but a large or neglected lawn may require heavier equipment to remove a dense layer of dead grass plants which have become matted and reduce the ability of the surviving grass plants to secure moisture and nutrients. While its removal can be rather alarming, creating huge heaps of dead grass and a sparse appearance, the end result will be worth the temporarily unsightly lawn. Once complete, lime can be applied, the lawn overseeded, and in November, a winterizer fertilizer can be spread.

Aerating the soil at this time of year will also produce a significant improvement in your lawn's uptake of moisture and nutrients. This is particularly important for areas which tend to become compacted by heavy foot traffic, or for lawns planted over heavy soils. An aerator which pulls small, round plugs of soil out of the ground is the most effective and is best employed when the lawn is damp. The unsightly plugs can be raked up and used to fill low spots or shredded with a rotary mower once they are dry.

A very sparse lawn may benefit from a process known as slice seeding which involves a piece of equipment with a row of blades which cuts into the existing turf and as it proceed, deposits seed and fertilizer. This method will often rejuvenate an established lawn and eliminate the need for a complete renovation.

For lawns which require a total overhaul, at least 4 inches of good loam should be present to grow healthy grass plants and 6 inches or more is preferred. Select grass seed mixtures appropriate for your light exposure and your anticipated usage of the area. There are formulas for sun or shade, mixtures which produce picture perfect lawns if they receive little traffic, or blends which provide a tough, resilient turf which can withstand considerable trampling. These latter formulas tend to contain fine-textured grasses which are not as easily crushed but may not give that vibrant, green carpet-like appearance that American homeowners seem to treasure. Inexpensive seed mixtures are rarely worth the time and effort it takes to spread them as the percentage of inert material or "other seed" can result in a sparse, weedy lawn that has to be reseeded in the spring. Read the labels.

Newly seeded areas should be watered lightly several times a day, if possible, to keep the soil moist without allowing large puddles to form which will cause the seed to float into low spots. Once a large percentage of the seed has sprouted, then longer periods of watering every few days are suggested. Early seeding will promote a sturdier turf which will better withstand the unpredictability of our New England winter.

Information is current as of September 18, 2000. For information on specific mortgage programs, call the lender. Rates, points, and programs are subject to change daily and cannot be guaranteed. Points include discount fees and origination fees. Quotes = rate+total points.APR (annual percentage rate), calculated as follows: conventional 20% down and $100,000 mortgage; jumbo 20% down and $252,700 mortgage; FHA 3%–5% down and $100,000 mortgage. Most quotes are for 30-day lock-ins, but can vary. Maximum conventional loan amount is $252,700; jumbo loans are in excess of $252,700. ARM–adjustable rate mortgage. ARM rates are quoted as follows: rate +total points/APR (type of ARM program is listed in parentheses). LTV–loan to value. MI–mortgage insurance. NA–not available. NQ–rates not quoted. Punishment is not the key to changing your child's behavior

By Mac and Barbara Bledsoe
SPECIAL TO CNC

Q: I can't find a way to teach my 13-year-old son how to respect others' property. I know your course teaches natural consequences rather than artificially created consequences.

So do I, but so far with this issue everyone else is receiving the consequences except Ben. Can you help?

A: It is true that we, in our "Parenting with Dignity" program, do not rely on punishment. It is not because we are opposed to punishment, per se, but because we don't believe it works very well in producing long term appropriate change in behavior.

I will try to explain what our thoughts are about your son's seeming lack of respect for the personal property of others.

I would like to ask you, "What is it you want him to do?" Notice that I did not ask "What do you want him to stop doing?"

Do you want him handle only things belonging to him? Do you want him to replace items he uses? Do you want him to ask before he touches anything not belonging to him? I cannot answer these questions for you, but in order to teach him what you want him to do, you must articulate your expectations. If he is like most creative and intelligent kids I have taught, you must also be able to explain why you want him to do this.

Next, What strategies will you use to teach this new idea to him?

This is the problem: ever since Ben was old enough to pick up things, he has taken other people's things without asking.

Did you ever teach him how to make that decision? Did you tell him what to do in the presence of others' belongings? Or did you just tell him what not to do with no suggestion of what to do? It is never too late to teach a new idea.

Remember the worst time to teach is during the act. It would be impossible for me to teach you how to run a video camera in the middle of your son's first baseball game or his first birthday party. You couldn't focus on the camera or the task of operating it. Pick a time when you both are calm and there are no distractions and then teach him what he should do when he is contemplating "borrowing" another's property. Tell him, "When you see some M&M's sitting on the table, it is appropriate to find the owner and ask if you may have some. As a matter of fact when you ask, you should also find out how many you may have. So, here are the M&M's. Now, you show me exactly what you will do the next time," and then let him do it!

Wait and watch while he does just as you suggested. Do not leave the teaching situation until he does exactly as you have requested. Wait a day and do the exact same thing, only this time do it with one of Dad's tools. Then, a day later do the same thing with another item that he might be tempted to "borrow."

Remember, it took you a couple of repetitions to learn to run a video camera or to ride a bike so it will naturally take him a few repetitions to learn to ask before using another's property. Keep repeating your detailed expectations until he does it without any coaching or reminding from you. All the while it is important to get him to self-reward for his newly developed behavior.

Also, he seems to need help in putting his stuff where he can find it. Do you want him to be better organized? Do you want him to ask permission? Do you want him to scrap the project he is on? You will have to answer these and other questions if you are going to have him make a positive change in his behavior.

Now, for a brief comment about consequences: I believe they should be a last resort and only used when all else fails. This does not mean that I, in any way, am advocating leniency.

Be firm, direct, and demanding with regard to your son's behavior. Always let him know exactly what you expect. Say what you mean, mean what you say, and always do what you say you are going to do. No exceptions. If you do create consequences be certain to make them fit the offense logically. If he takes his sister's things without asking, then her room becomes off limits to him. If your tape disappears then he can't use your tape. If necessary, put it in a locked drawer.

If you do decide to resort to consequences, please remember what happened to me as I was growing up. I was sent to my room at least 1000 times for teasing my sisters.

While suffering the consequences of my inappropriate behavior, I never one time held an idea in my head that my parents wanted to rule my world. When I went to my room the ideas that filled my head were that I hated my sisters, and that my parents weren't fair. I vowed over and over that as soon as I got out of my room, I would get my sisters out behind the barn and hold their heads in the watering trough for tattling on me. And as I thought about how much I hated my folks, never did I think about how I would treat my sisters in a reasonable manner because nobody ever gave me a suggestion of what I should do in place of my inappropriate behavior.

One final thought. The problem is really not one of stealing or even of dishonesty. Rather it seems to be only a problem of a son viewing things in the home as sort of a big pool of common property. Teach it in that context ó that you are simply defining the limits and boundaries to personal property in your home.

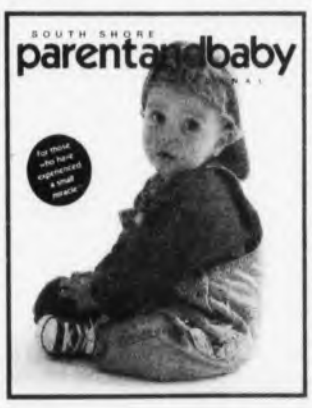
Tom and Lisa Dallaire attempt to amuse their two-month-old daughter, Elizabeth.

This month in Parent and Baby Journal

The October issue of Parent and Baby Journal features a variety of articles aimed to help local parents with young children.

The upcoming edition includes a piece by Dr. Peter Gorski, president of the WellChild Foundation in Boston, about the importance of grandparents in a childís life. In his monthly column, Dr. Gorski explains that children who are loved or mentored by an older person are more likely to grow healthy, succeed in school and achieve in life.



Also featured in this monthís edition are articles on sleeping habits, the first trip to the dentist and child car seat safety.

Parent and Baby Journal is published monthly in five separate geographic zones by Community Newspaper Company. The free publication can be found at several locations, including local grocery stores, toy stores, doctor and dental offices. Check out our website to find a location nearest you.

Subscriptions cost $12 for one year, and $18 for two years. Subscribers are invited to sign up for a monthly electronic newsletter for information about whatís inside Parent and Baby Journal. The newsletter also provides a schedule for upcoming online chats that give parents a chance to pose questions to experts who contribute to the journal.

The importance of understanding a child's reactions

By Dr. Peter A. Gorski
SPECIAL TO CNC

How many four-year-olds does it take to derail a train? This question may sound like a joke you have heard in the past. Yet, what I observed last week at a local preschool was funnier and more interesting than any imaginary story. Five young children chose to play with a toy train set in a corner partitioned off from the large open classroom by shelves on three of its four sides. Gus and Emma jointly controlled the main action and contributed most of the volume coming from the small area. At times appearing to be joined at the hip, the two laid down new track and connected plastic train cars at a feverish pace. Each child added onto his or her own end of the track and train under construction. So long as neither felt compelled to connect the two ends and close the circle of the track, they talked and sang harmoniously. Each let the other build in whatever direction he or she fancied.

Eventually, they decided they had built enough of a course to push the train set through. Thatís when the fun began. There was no obvious engine to lead or caboose to follow. Instead, Gus and Emma alternated giving and receiving orders as to where the train was to move. The goals changed constantly along with the engineer in charge. Still, somehow, the two continued to play peacefully at cross-purposes.

But Wally added a wrinkle to the scene. Wally had been watching his playmates erect this fascinating set. He marveled slightly at the great construction project that Emma and Gus were creating. And he wanted desperately to join their fun. Wally, I suspect, is not one who jumps right into a social opportunity. More likely, he holds himself back, observing until he grows increasingly comfortable and eager. Finally, when he either receives an invitation or can no longer contain his desire to participate, Wally makes his move. Today, I became aware of Wally when he stood up and peered down at Gus and Emma who were too busy to notice his interest in their activity. As he watched, Wally clutched the all-important bright blue train locomotive like a football, in the crook of his left arm. With a sudden thrust of his arm, he waved the locomotive and offered his help.

ìNeed an engine?í along with third player, he hoped. Emma and Gus both leaped up to grab the gift and assert his or her ultimate control over the trainís direction. A wrestling match began, as the two yelled, pushed and pulled in a rapidly escalating primeval competition. The centrifugal force of their tussle spun Wally completely out of the ring and knocked all the train cars off the track.

Amazingly, the two other children in the train corner maintained their equilibrium, concentrating on their solitary play. Molly, crouched over her few pieces of train and track, remained completely undistracted by the mayhem taking place at her feet. At first, Edward also appeared not to notice the human tornado spinning out of control right next to him. At some point, he must have senses that he was about the get swept up in the force of Gus and Emmaís intensifying fury. At that point, Edward faced them calmly and announced, iWe can call the teacher.í Just as suddenly, the combatants ceased fire and packed away all the toys as the teacher, with her implicit sense of timing, called all the children back for story time.

I loved the lessons I learned from observing the children during those few minutes. Certainly, I was impressed to see how well they had internalized the benefit and risk of attracting an adultís attention. These kids evidently experienced some form of consistent responsiveness at home and at school. They believed in the moral authority of parent figures and relied on their external conscience to keep the peace and maintain security.

I also witnessed the fascinating array of individual differences among human beings. Each of us is born with a set of temperamental characteristics that guide our behavior as much as they contribute to our personality. Emma and Gus were both active, intense children who jump into action without hesitation. Wally is more cautious or slow to warm up, before he feels comfortable enough to get involved socially. Molly does not get distracted and she has a long attention span. Edward, less intense than his peers, displayed a long persistence at task together with a more distracted nature. Caregivers who know these children well probably could have predicted and handled the excitement that I observed. Indeed, the nature of the children, not the toys, kept the train from arriving at the station on schedule.

The temperamental match between all children and their parents, siblings, teachers or peers graces these relationships with smooth sailing or frequent storms. By understanding the way a child consistently reacts to situations, we can learn to distinguish willful acts from instinctive behavior. So much the wiser, we can then encourage children to behave in ways that help them adapt comfortably and succeed socially.

Shuttle bus between JFK and Newark airports

Ask George

By George Hobica
Copley News Service

Q. Is there a shuttle bus between New York's JFK Airport and Newark airport? If so, what is the cost and schedule?

A. There is a shuttle. It costs $22 each way, takes an hour and 15 minutes, and leaves once an hour on the hour in both directions.

For more information, call (800) 585-3000 or visit www.grayline.com.

Q. We're planning on adopting a child in Asia but we don't know exactly when we need to travel to pick her up, and we've found that last-minute airfares are very high.

Do the airlines offer special fares for people in our situation, or is there another way we could get a good fare at the last minute?

A. Northwest Airlines has a special program for parents-to-be like you. The fares don't require advance purchase, are very flexible, have no cancellation or change penalties, allow open returns and stopovers and are not capacity controlled (if there's an empty seat on the plane, you get it).

They even have low business-class fares and allow immediate family members, such as any children you may already have, to travel with you at the same fare. To qualify, you need to provide proof of U.S. residency, the name and phone number of your adoption agency, information from your Notice of Favorable Determination letter (INS I-171-H), the date of completion of Advanced Processing and the location to which your approved Advanced Processing Application has been forwarded.

For more information visit http://nwa.com/features/adopt.shtml or call a KLM/Northwest international adoption fare specialist at (800) 322-4162, Monday through Friday, 7:30 a.m. to 7:30 p.m., CST, or contact your travel professional.

You could also try to get a consolidator ticket, since they usually don't require advance purchase. But the Northwest program is probably your best bet since it's so flexible and has no change/cancellation penalties.

Q. I am having a problem with getting back the money that my husband paid for a Caribbean cruise on Norwegian Cruise Lines leaving Oct. 6. He ordered the cruise from Onecruise.com on Jan. 26, bought insurance from a company called TravelSafe on Feb. 12, and discovered he had cancer April 9. He canceled the trip and filled out the forms for TravelSafe on April 27, and died July 17.

He called TravelSafe before he died, and I have called several times and cannot seem to reach anyone with any authority to tell me that my claim is approved.

I am terribly frustrated and have the feeling that they will delay and delay until it's too late to get my money back. Is there anything else I can do?

A. This proved to be a complicated case, but the good news is that your credit card was refunded the entire amount of your cruise in mid-August. Because your husband canceled the cruise so far in advance, there was never a doubt that you would receive a full refund, except for a $100 processing fee imposed by Granby, Ct.-based Onecruise.com (formerly Cruisin' Inc.).

So, TravelSafe (which is affiliated with San Diego-based CSA insurance) never should have been involved in this matter in the first place, and you should have been contacting Onecruise.com or NCL directly to get a refund. Onecruise.com was willing to waive the $100 fee if they could rebook the cabin, which your husband agreed to, and which they succeeded in doing. The time it took to rebook contributed in part to the delay in getting your money back. But even the rebooking doesn't explain why it took 3 1/2 months to get a refund (it usually takes no more than two months to get a refund in a case like this).

George Hobica

Onecruise.com claims that NCL "dropped the ball," and that had you called them first, rather than TravelSafe, the refund would have been processed sooner.

Have a travel question? George can be reached via e-mail at georgehobica(at)aol.com, or by writing to this newspaper.

'Taylored' to the audience

ing. The highlights of my career are right now. It's a wonderful time in my life."

Although many people have referred to Taylor as a folk singer, he has other thoughts.

"Because I play an acoustic guitar, it's easy to classify me as a folk singer," he notes. "But I think I'm more of a pop singer. I've always loved pop music, and that's just who I am. Aside from that pop element, I'm a person who just enjoys beautifully written songs."

Taylor says he feels some of the best tunes he's written include numbers like "Life is Good," "Glad I Know You Well," and "My Father's Eyes."

"I've really been blessed to have a couple really good songs show up on my guitar."

Part of the reason for his musical success is because he was influenced by some good people. Taylor says he enjoys plenty of different music by various bands.

"I love Neil Young for his quirkiness. I love Madonna for her pure marketing ability. I love the Beastie Boys for taking self-destruction to new levels. I'm impressed by a lot of different things."

But his biggest influence is his big brother James.

"We're the best of friends," Livingston says of his brother. "He's a terrific guy and I'm just crazy about him."

Livingston said James played a big part in getting him into music.

"I've always been a singer," he says. "I started at a young age. It always just made me feel calm. Starting to play the guitar was just a natural extension of my singing. After I started playing guitar at the age of 13, I started to play other instruments like piano. James was there, and believe me, he'd let me know when I played things wrong."

By the age of 16, Livingston was writing a lot of his own music on a regular basis. And that was just the beginning.

Since then, music has taken the younger Taylor far. And while music is the central part of his life, Livingston said he likes to keep busy with other things like teaching, and flying.

"I'm a pilot. That's a passion for me. A lot of people tell me my plane needs a coat of paint and that I need a facelift, but neither will ever happen."

But when it comes to pure joy for Taylor, nothing is as good as playing a great piece of music on stage for an audience. Under the spotlight, Taylor is able to connect with his listeners in a big way.

"What makes an audience get into a piece of music is that sense of familiarity—audiences need to be able to relate to a song. I think a good piece of music reflects familiarity in an unexpected location. A good song works like a good piece of humor."

Don't expect to get a musical lineup for Saturday's show, because there isn't one.

"I haven't had a set list since 1974," he said. "I'll just show up and things will start coming to me. That's part of the magic."

For more information on the Sept. 23 show which begins at 8 p.m., call (781) 871-2787 or log onto The Company Theatre website at www.companytheatre.com.

An advocate for the students

New principal at the helm of CMHS

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

It's funny how some things seem to come full circle.

When former Cohasset High School principal Frank Giuliano was the superintendent of schools in Milton, the high school's English Department head was a scholarly type named Dr. Michael Jones.

"He considered himself an 'advocate of the child,'" Jones remembered about Giuliano. "He was an aggressive administrator who knew what he believed in. He had two values: courage and integrity."

Now, Jones is sitting in Giuliano's seat as the new principal of Cohasset Middle/ High School, and has based his administrative career on what he learned. He was the search committee's unanimous choice to replace Curtis Collins, who retired this past summer.

"[Giuliano] was very inspiring to me," Jones remembered. "I would have very happy as a teacher and department head, but he showed me what a school leader could be."

Jones, who already had received his doctorate in English from Boston College, went back to school and received his masters degree in School Administration from Bridgewater State College – a well respected teaching college – and jumped to the administrative side as assistant principal at Whitman-Hanson Regional High School in 1985.

"I have never seen such a group of poised, courteous kids. They're bright, express themselves well and are marvelous to work with."
— Michael Jones, CMHS principal

"I kind of came into it backwards," he said. After receiving his doctorate, he taught some courses at Boston College, before going back in to the public school system. "I went from academic scholarship into education."

Since then, with a brief respite as a department head in the mid 90s, Jones has been one of those administrative child advocates.

He has also added a value of his own to the two learned from Giuliano – loyalty – whether its loyalty to his teachers, fellow administrators, or to the students.

"A leader is judged as much by his actions as by his words. So if I believe in loyalty, then I have to act loyal," he said.

Jones would like to be loyal to Cohasset a while. What he has found here isn't a district in chaos, but instead a successful, well supported system, where his focus can be on providing a complete, all-around education to the town's youth.

"The kids are fantastic," he gushed. "I have never seen such a group of poised, courteous kids. They're bright, express themselves well and are marvelous to work with."

He said because of the size of the school and the students' relationship with the "well-qualified" faculty, Jones said the middle/high school has "the feel of a private school," to it. As well it should. In a town where parents can afford to send their children to a private school, if they don't feel the public education is good enough, extra pres-

Police to conduct citizen's academy

Hope to bridge communication gap

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

If you have ever wondered what being a police officer today is like then you may soon get your chance.

The Cohasset Police Department has decided to follow the lead of other South Shore towns, including Hingham and Scituate, by conducting a Citizens Police Academy to give participants perspective into the day-to-day life of a police officer.

"We hope the academy helps facilitate communication between police and the public," Police Chief Brian Noonan said.

The academy will run from 6-10 p.m. for ten weeks, starting Tuesday, Oct. 10. Applications, which should be returned by Oct. 6, are available at the police station on Elm Street.

Noonan said there is no charge for participants. The $3,000 cost of conducting the academy that may include some overtime to cover shifts is being paid for through a state grant earmarked for community policing services.

"We hope participants will see what we really do, how people are treated and how we do our job."
— Police Chief Brian Noonan

Sessions will include topics such as constitutional law, criminal law, motor vehicle law, patrol procedures, investigative techniques, court procedures and CPR. There may be an opportunity for participants to go on "ride-alongs" with officers, Noonan said.

"The police academy is something we've been wanting to do for a long time but haven't had the money," Noonan said. The police department receives about $14,000 a year in community policing grants that

Harbor Walk gains momentum

CRC encouraged after meeting with fed., state agencies

By Rick Collins

Sometimes lost in the din surrounding proposed aesthetic improvements to the Cohasset Village area is that the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation is also looking as the possibility of creating a formal promenade along the sea wall bordering Cohasset Harbor.

On one of the worst weather days in recent memory Tuesday, Den Rizzo, the executive director of the non-profit CRC, met representatives from various state and federal agencies to discuss the possibility of such a harbor walk.

On the chilly, raw and rainy day, Rizzo gave representatives from the Environmental Protection Agency, Army Corps of Engineers, Department of Environmental Protection and Coastal Zone Management, a brief tour of the area, followed by a discussion of the project's feasibility. It was the second such meeting between Rizzo and the agencies.

"It was to sort of review the concept regarding the harbor walk and continue to get input on permitting issues, and their concerns regarding natural resources and how the harbor walk would impact them," said Rizzo afterwards. He said he also received "constructive criticism" on structural constraints the proposal might face.

"Really what we're doing is developing a partnership with these state agencies. They're helping us with the initial visionary stages, so when it becomes time to actually put the harbor walk on a set of plans, they'll be familiar with the project and

Area seniors say real estate prices and lack of affordable housing are getting to be a burden

Lucy Rhodes wanted to spend the rest of her life in the Marshfield home she lived in for 57 years. But the cost of keeping up her home became too much of a burden on the 86-year-old's fixed income, so she was forced to sell the house last December.

Diane Cook, 67, was also forced to sell her Marshfield home because she found the upkeep and expenses too costly. Cook worked for the post office in Brant Rock for 30 years, but her fixed income and pension wasn't enough to pay for the house she lived in since 1978.

"The home (in Marshfield) was just a financial burden on me," Cook said. "I would've stayed there if I had enough money. It just got so expensive to keep the place up, and I had prescriptions and other things to pay for."

She looked to different banks in order to try to get a loan in hopes of keeping her house, but because of her limited income, she was rejected.

Like Cook, Rhodes too hated to leave her beloved home.

"I lived in Marshfield for so many years," Rhodes said. "I hated to leave. I wanted to stay there forever, but I just couldn't afford it. When I lived there, I was barely getting by after buying things like food and prescriptions that I needed. And I certainly don't want my children paying my bills."

Shuttle bus between JFK and Newark airports

Ask George

By George Hobica
Copley News Service

Q. Is there a shuttle bus between New York's JFK Airport and Newark airport? If so, what is the cost and schedule?

A. There is a shuttle. It costs $22 each way, takes an hour and 15 minutes, and leaves once an hour on the hour in both directions.

For more information, call (800) 385-4000 or visit www.coachusa.com.

Q. We're planning on adopting a child in Asia but we don't know exactly when we need to travel to pick her up, and we've found that last-minute airfares are very high.

Do the airlines offer special fares for people in our situation, or is there another way we could get a good fare at the last minute?

A. Northwest Airlines has a special program for parents-to-be like you. The fares don't require advance purchase, are very flexible, have no cancellation or change penalties, allow open returns and stopovers and are not capacity controlled (if there's an empty seat on the plane, you get it).

They even have low business-class fares and allow immediate family members, such as any children you may already have, to travel with you at the same fare. To qualify, you need to provide proof of U.S. residency, the name and phone number of your adoption agency, information from your Notice of Favorable Determination letter (INS I-171-H), the date of completion of Advanced Processing and the location to which your approved Advanced Processing Application has been forwarded.

For more information visit http://nwa.com/features/adopt.shtml or call a KLM/Northwest international adoption fare specialist at (800) 322-4162, Monday through Friday, 7:30 a.m. to 7:30 p.m., CST, or contact your travel professional.

You could also try to get a consolidator ticket, since they usually don't require advance purchase. But the Northwest program is probably your best bet since it's so flexible and has no change/cancellation penalties.

Q. I am having a problem with getting back the money that my husband paid for a Caribbean cruise on Norwegian Cruise Lines leaving Oct. 6. He ordered the cruise from Onecruise.com on Jan. 26, bought insurance from a company called TravelSafe on Feb. 12, and discovered he had cancer April 9. He canceled the trip and filled out the forms for TravelSafe on April 27, and died July 17.

He called TravelSafe before he died, and I have called several times and cannot seem to reach anyone with any authority to tell me that my claim is approved.

I am terribly frustrated and have the feeling that they will delay and delay until it's too late to get my money back. Is there anything else I can do?

A. This proved to be a complicated case, but the good news is that your credit card was refunded the entire amount of your cruise in mid-August. Because your husband canceled the cruise so far in advance, there was never a doubt that you would receive a full refund, except for a $100 processing fee imposed by Granby, Ct.-based Onecruise.com (formerly Cruisin' Inc.).

So, TravelSafe (which is affiliated with San Diego-based CSA insurance) never should have been involved in this matter in the first place, and you should have been contacting Onecruise.com or NCL directly to get a refund. Onecruise.com was willing to waive the $100 fee if they could rebook the cabin, which your husband agreed to, and which they succeeded in doing. The time it took to rebook contributed in part to the delay in getting your money back. But even the rebooking doesn't explain why it took 3 1/2 months to get a refund (it usually takes no more than two months to get a refund in a case like this).

George Hobica

Onecruise.com claims that NCL "dropped the ball," and that had you called them first, rather than TravelSafe, the refund would have been processed sooner.

Have a travel question? George can be reached via e-mail at georgehobica(at)aol.com, or by writing to this newspaper.

'Taylored' to the audience

ing. The highlights of my career are right now. It's a wonderful time in my life."

Although many people have referred to Taylor as a folk singer, he has other thoughts.

"Because I play an acoustic guitar, it's easy to classify me as a folk singer," he notes. "But I think I'm more of a pop singer. I've always loved pop music, and that's just who I am. Aside from that pop element, I'm a person who just enjoys beautifully written songs."

Taylor says he feels some of the best tunes he's written include numbers like "Life is Good," "Glad I Know You Well," and "My Father's Eyes."

"I've really been blessed to have a couple really good songs show up on my guitar."

Part of the reason for his musical success is because he was influenced by some good people. Taylor says he enjoys plenty of different music by various bands.

"I love Neil Young for his quirkiness. I love Madonna for her pure marketing ability. I love the Beastie Boys for taking self-destruction to new levels. I'm impressed by a lot of different things."

But his biggest influence is his big brother James.

"We're the best of friends," Livingston says of his brother. "He's a terrific guy and I'm just crazy about him."

Livingston said James played a big part in getting him into music.

"I've always been a singer," he says. "I started at a young age. It always just made me feel calm. Starting to play the guitar was just a natural extension of my singing. After I started playing guitar at the age of 13, I started to play other instruments like piano. James was there, and believe me, he'd let me know when I played things wrong."

By the age of 16, Livingston was writing a lot of his own music on a regular basis. And that was just the beginning.

Since then, music has taken the younger Taylor far. And while music is the central part of his life, Livingston said he likes to keep busy with other things like teaching, and flying.

"I'm a pilot. That's a passion for me. A lot of people tell me my plane needs a coat of paint and that I need a facelift, but neither will ever happen."

But when it comes to pure joy for Taylor, nothing is as good as playing a great piece of music on stage for an audience. Under the spotlight, Taylor is able to connect with his listeners in a big way.

"What makes an audience get into a piece of music is that sense of familiarity—audiences need to be able to relate to a song. I think a good piece of music reflects familiarity in an unexpected location. A good song works like a good piece of humor."

Don't expect to get a musical lineup for Saturday's show, because there isn't one.

"I haven't had a set list since 1974," he said. "I'll just show up and things will start coming to me. That's part of the magic."

Arrowwood home reverts to single family dwelling

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

In a precedent-setting decision, the Zoning Board of Appeals decided the home at 15 Arrowwood St. may no longer be used as a two-family dwelling.

The decision could affect the status of other two-family homes in the neighborhood.

Building Inspector Robert Egan said the zoning board did not take the issue lightly.

"It was a wrenching decision," he said.

Triggered by a neighbor's complaint, Egan looked into the two-family zoning issue and notified the homeowner, Aarron Hassan, last March that he was in violation of the zoning by-law if he continued to use the house as a two-family dwelling.

Hassan appealed Egan's decision to the ZBA. The ruling filed with the town clerk last week upholds Egan's decision.

Although the single-family house that Hassan's father Samuel Hassan built was legally converted to a two-family dwelling in 1958 by adding two bedrooms, a kitchen and a bath upstairs — the use became non-conforming when the zoning by-law was changed in 1969 increasing the minimum lot size for two-family homes in that district. The zoning change would not pose a problem if the house had been used continually as a two-family dwelling.

But the zoning board said no affirmative evidence, such as tax or census records or leases, was presented at the hearing showing the use of the house as a two-family had not lapsed for a period of three years since the by-law was amended. Therefore, the non-conforming use was "extinguished through abandonment" and must now conform to the by-law, the ZBA stated.

"Even on the basis of testimony, the occupancy of the second unit at 15 Arrowwood St. is very unclear to this board for the entire decade of the 1970s," the ZBA decision stated.

Over the years, several of the Hassan children and other relatives stayed in the apartment. In 1980 Sam Hassan sold the house to his son, Aaron, who rented it out to non-family members.

The so-called veterans housing area off Pond Street that includes Arrowwood pre-dates the town's zoning laws and consists of about 40 lots offered to veterans returning from World War II for $100 each. The deeds to those lots state that single- or two-family residences may be constructed there.

It's not clear what immediate effect the ZBA decision could have on other two-family homes in the neighborhood.

"I'm not going to be counting mailboxes," Egan said. "But I wouldn't be surprised if I get a list."

CORRECTION

The Colonial re-enactors, shown here at an anti-train rally in North Scituate, were incorrectly identified as members of the Hingham Militia in this photo that appeared in last week's Mariner. The men, some of whom participate in several re-enactor groups were members of the Scituate Patriots. The Mariner regrets the error.

Recycle oil filters, antifreeze, batteries

Used oil filters, antifreeze and batteries can be recycled by bringing them to the Cohasset Recycling Transfer Facility on Cedar Street..

"We have been successful in providing for the recycling of used oil filters, antifreeze and batteries by Cohasset residents," said Recycling Committee chairman Arthur Lehr. "We urge everyone to separate and recycle these items rather than throw them away."

In addition to these materials, Cohasset residents may also bring the following to the RTF for recycling: newspapers, white paper, junk mail, plastic bottles, aluminum, steel, cardboard, glass (separate by color), and cans (which should be cleaned out). Paint is accepted, but only on designated days. A fee is required for dropping off: tires, household appliances, household furniture and other miscellaneous bulky materials.

Candidates' finance numbers are released

Bradley leads all candidates in money raised, spent

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Garrett Bradley, the Democratic nominee for the state representative seat, led all candidates in both money raised and spent in the 3rd Plymouth District, according to official campaign financial records.

Bradley, who defeated Michael Holden last week to win the nomination, raised $59,133.98 from Jan. 1 to Sept. 1, and spent $63,199.34 during that same time. More than $23,000 of that money was spent on publicity, advertising, and printing and mailing costs. Another $13,000 was spent on fundraisers and other campaign events.

The numbers are compiled from Bradley's campaign finance report that is required to be filled out and sent to the Office of Campaign and Political Finance. Any person who declares his or her candidacy and then raises money, must record and account for every cent collected. The names and addresses of each donor over $50 must be itemized, and the occupation of every donor of more than $200 must also be included.

Another report must be turned in eight days before the general election, and again in January.

In 1998 Bradley raised $80,717 in his race against incumbent state Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray, the sixth highest total raised in the state that year, trailing such heavy-hitters as Speaker of the House Thomas Finneran (first with $152,356 raised), and House Ways and Means Chairman Paul Haley (fourth with $96,269).

In terms of spending, Bradley ranked fifth with $99,012 in expenditures in 1998. Among Bradley, Mary Jeanette Murray (who spent $51,995.71), and the two Democrats that Bradley beat in the primary, Josh Cutler and Walter Murray, $196,588.33 was spent vying for the seat Rep. Murray retained – the third most expended that year in a state representative race. The most money spent that year was the race in the 27th Middlesex district where more than $212,000 was expended. The average amount spent in a representative race in 1998 was $17,779.

For Bradley, the money he has spent over the past four years has been used to give the people of the 3rd Plymouth District an idea of who he is.

"It's expensive to talk to the voters," he said, "I want them to know where I stand."

Bradley said between ads, flyers, pamphlets and having an office, the money soon adds up. "It's expensive to run a campaign. If you look across the state, this is what state rep races cost nowadays," he said.

He may have needed to spend as much as he did because of his opposition in the last two elections. In 1998, Bradley ran against Cutler, a Hull selectman, in the primary, won by 200 votes and then had to face the wildly popular 24-year incumbent Mary Jeanette Murray in the general election. This past year, he ran against Holden, a former Hingham selectman. In both instances for Bradley, it was crucial to flood the district with his literature and spread his name. Holden spent more than $39,000 in his attempt to get the Democratic nod.

Most of the money, said Bradley, comes from family and friends. "The first thing anyone does [when raising money] is reach out to family and friends," he said adding that he also gets money from residents after visits. "I just got a check for $20 in the mail from someone on Fort Hill Road [in Hingham]. I'll receive it from going door-to-door. Some will come with notes thanking me for walking up their long driveway."

Through Sept. 1, Republican nominee Mary Anne McKenna, who ran unopposed in the primary, raised $15,724, though she says her campaign has raised an additional $5,000 since the finance report was filed.

She said she doesn't feel at a disadvantage because of the size of her opponent's war chest, but is instead concerned about where the money is coming from. "It is unsettling to see the amount of dollars being sent into our district by Democratic fundraisers outside of the district," she said warning, "Our district is not for sale."

She wasn't referring to families and friends who donate to campaigns, instead money from union endorsements and other special interest groups. Bradley recorded $1,800 in money received from area unions.

Bradley said the money received from sources such as unions demonstrate the "widespread support" he has.

Nonetheless, McKenna said she is comfortable with her fundraising activities. "We are raising the amount of funds we need as the rate we anticipated, but remember, we started [fundraising] much later," she said, adding, "We didn't start raising money four years ago."

Walter Murray, an independent candidate, has raised $5,820 as of Sept. 1.

According to Dennis Kennedy, a public information spokesman in the secretary of state's office, said there is a $500 limit on how much money an individual can give to a candidate. Political action committees (PACs), special interest groups that raise money specifically to help support a candidate, is also limited to $500. Town committees are limited to $1000 in support but are unlimited in how much they can donate in "in-kind" donations, such as paying for a candidates advertising, printing costs or hall rental fees.

The limit for state organizations is $3,000.

Candidates' focus turns to November

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Walter Murray

Mary Anne McKenna

Garrett Bradley

The leaves haven't really begun to turn, and already Democrat Garrett Bradley, Republican Mary Anne McKenna and independent candidate Walter Murray are thinking about November.

But thoughts of turkey, corn and pilgrims aren't what's dominating their thoughts — it's taxes, campaigning and polls.

The three candidates, vying for long-time state Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray's State House seat, have exactly 40 days from today to get their messages out to the voters of Hingham, Hull and Cohasset, and they are not wasting a minute.

Bradley was out knocking on doors the day after his comfortable 1,850-vote primary victory over Democrat Michael Holden. "One on one is the most effective way to tell how you stand on the issues," he said. "We started out there the next day and we're going to keep on going door-to-door until Election Day."

McKenna, who was unopposed in the Sept. 19 primary, said she too will be criss-crossing the district. "I'm going to keep myself very busy going door-to-door in order to listen to my constituents and to get my ideas across." She said she will focus on education and health care benefits for the region. McKenna also hopes to convince some voters to cross party lines and keep the state representative seat Republican. "I clearly hope to represent all of the people in the district regardless of party affiliation, and secure votes from independent voters and disenchanted Democrats," she said.

She will be challenged for the independent vote by Bradley who also said the issues the region face shouldn't be resolved by partisan politics. "We're going to reach out to everybody, not just Democrats, but independents and Republicans," he said. "We're going to focus on important issues that transcend party lines and we'll ask them to support me."

Murray said so far he has been encouraged by the number of people responding to the fact he is an independent candidate. "I'm looking for conservative Democrats and moderate Republicans because ideologically, I'm right in the middle," he explained.

Without a primary to worry about, Murray started his campaign this summer and has been working on his visibility. "I've been going to events and forums, holding signs at the post office, grocery stores and coffee shops."

Bradley also said he hopes to keep the race clean, and not get into negative personal attacks.

"My focus is on saying 'This is who I am, this is my background, these are the important issues and this is what I'd do.' That's what we should be focused on," he said.

Bradley said he also has some forums in the district that he will attend such as an upcoming Stop Handgun Violence meeting in Cohasset Oct. 5.

McKenna said she "has coffees lined up almost every night" and will be at a breakfast sponsored by the Children's Champion Network in Hingham, along with "meeting with many different civic groups."

A debate among Bradley, McKenna and independent candidate Walter Murray that is sponsored by The Hingham Journal will be held at Hingham Town Hall on Oct. 18.

Bradley had the chance to hone his debating skills when he debated Holden in September. Now it's time for McKenna and Murray to prepare.

"I've been filling out some of my issues and positions," said Murray. "I'm just really hoping voters pay closer attention to issues, and more particularly, what type of leadership the candidate brings to the district...Knocking on doors does not a good politician make. It just makes you a good doorknocker.

"So much emphasis was placed on the popularity contest of just meeting voters, and I realize that it's important but what is most important is the issues and who can bring leadership to the district," he said.

The general election will be held Nov. 7.

WORSHIP NOTES

Mormon Temple

Regular meetings of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints (Hingham) will be replaced on Sunday, Oct. 1, as President Gordon B. Hinckley comes to Boston for the dedication of the Boston Temple. This is the 100th Mormon temple to be built and the first temple in the New England area.

During the past three weeks the temple has been open for the public to see the beautiful interior with thousands taken on guided tours from early morning to late at night. As with all LDS temples once dedicated none but members who hold a "recommend" are allowed inside. Temples are built for the "sealing" of young couples for life and eternity and for the baptism and sealings, by proxy, of ancestors.

There will be no services held at the LDS chapel, 379 Gardner St., Hingham, on Oct. 1. Regular meetings will be resumed on the Sundays following.

Angelspeake author

An Angelspeake Workshop and book signing by Trudy Griswold, author of the best selling books, "Angelspeake: How to Talk With Your Angels" and "The Angelspeake Book of Prayer and Healing," will take place at the Second Congregational Church of Cohasset Wednesday, Oct. 18, from 7 to 9:30 p.m.

The class fee is $40. To register and reserve your seat, call 383-0345.

Abbey lecture series

The Glastonbury Series 2000-2001, "Listening to Other Voices: The Way of Prayer in Our Religious Traditions," presents Anton C. Vrame, Ph.D. who will speak on "Icons and Prayer of the Head, Heart and Hands." The event will take place at 7:15 p.m. Thursday, Oct. 5, at Glastonbury Abbey in Hingham.

Vrame is adjunct professor at Holy Cross Greek Orthodox School of Theology and author of "The Educating Icon: Teaching Wisdom and Holiness in the Orthodox Way." This series is sponsored by the Benedictine Monks of Glastonbury Abbey. Phone (781) 749-2155 for reservations. No charge. Donations welcome.

AROUND TOWN

APPLE PICKING TIME

Hello everyone! As I start this column, it is starting to get chilly outside, the leaves are beginning to change and apple picking time is here. We are so lucky to have such wonderful seasons, as each one is so different. Make sure to enjoy the season, it will be winter before we know it. I have a lot of great news to share this week, thank you to everyone who sends, calls or emails this to me. Starting next week, make sure to note a new phone number to call in your news.

COLBY ORIENTATION

I had a great message sent to me from Colby College in Waterville, Maine. Jessie L. Zerendow of Cohasset enrolled at Colby College this fall and embarked on a four-day orientation trip to help acclimate her to college life before classes began. Jessie participated in a canoeing and camping trip through the Belgrade chain of lakes in central Maine from Aug. 30-Sept. 2. Jessie traveled with about a dozen other students, including two returning students who were trip leaders. Jessie is the daughter of Donald and Victoria Zerendow. Besides introducing students to outdoor recreation and public service opportunities in Maine, Colby Outdoor Orientation Trips provide a relaxed atmosphere where students can make initial friendships and get their bearings. What a great program to have when you first leave home. It sure sounded like a great time, Jessie. Good luck with your studies.

NEW BABY GIRL

We have some great news from a former Cohasset family! David and Holly(Ludlow) Drake, along with their sons, Wellington and Harrison, would like to welcome their new daughter and sister, Georgia Ally Drake! Georgia was born on Sept. 1 and weighed in at 8 pounds, 14 ounces. Her grandparents are Marcia and Jeff Ludlow and Mary and Richard Drake. I bet she is beautiful and being hugged and cuddled all the time. Congratulations and we are sure that Georgia will be coming to Cohasset to visit her cousins.

DANCE TEACHER RETURNS

The South Shore Community Center is pleased to announce that Sara Wheeler will be returning again this year, to direct our Musical Theater Class. Sara has taught at the Dance Carousel and is presently teaching at Raquelle's Institute of Dance. Sara has also choreographed plays for the Cohasset Drama Club. She is a very versatile and talented teacher and the community center is pleased to have her back again. This year's production for ages 5-6 will be "Little Red Riding Hood." The class will meet on Fridays from 3:15-4:30 p.m. for 12 weeks. "James and the Giant Peach" is the other production for ages 7-10 plus, also on Fridays from 4:30-5:45 p.m. The children will learn many aspects of performing arts including musical theater, improvisational skills, scene study, acting, lip sync, dance and more. If you are interested, please stop at the Community Center or call 383-0088.

BLUEBERRY PICKING

Sandcastles Childcare pre-schoolers Nicole and Brett Tivnan, Megan Kearney and Eric Donovan enjoy an outing to a blueberry patch. Sandcastles is located at 152 King St. in Cohasset.

BC HIGH AWARDS

Three young Cohasset men were recognized with special awards from Boston College High School recently, at an assembly to celebrate and reward the school's underclassmen. Joel R. Carpenter, a sophomore along with David F. Crowley-Buck and Joseph D. Roach, both freshmen were presented the awards from Norman Swain, acting principal of B.C. High. These awards were in Excellence for their outstanding achievement of being the top students in their classes. Joel received his in Human Biology, David in English I Advanced, Biology I and Modern World History and Joseph in Christian Thought, English I and Geometry. Fantastic job, gentlemen!

OFF TO TABOR

Zoe Murray, the daughter of Richard Murray and Deborah Meehan of Cohasset, will be entering Tabor Academy this fall as a new member of the freshmen class. Tabor academy is located in Marion, Mass. and offers new students an opportunity to experience life onboard S.S.V. TABOR BOY, Tabor's 90-foot schooner. Currently, Zoe is participating in Tabor's "Orientation at Sea." Tabor faculty and students are together for six days of sailing, exploring and learning along the coast of Maine. What a great experience for you Zoe, good luck this year!

FIRST BOOK

We have an author in our midst! Sacred Heart High School History teacher, Ella Jane Bruenm, CDP, a native of Cohasset recently had her first book published by Praeger Publications. The book is the product of Sr. Ella Jane's work at Harvard University for a Master's Degree in History. "Through Ordinary Eyes" is a look at the letters that Rufus Robbins wrote back home to his family in South Abington, Mass. during the time of the Civil War. Rufus had enlisted in the Union army at the age of 31, serving with the Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry. The letters help illustrate the hardships that Robbins and others like him had to face as they waited for the fighting to reach their areas. "The thing that touched me the most was just how much of a real person Rufus became to me because of these letters," said Sr. Ella Jane. "They dealt with the things that everyone comes across everyday." For more information on the book, contact Sacred Heart High School Public Relations Officer David Wolcott at (781) 585-7511, Ext. 347.

RAISING THE BAR

Cohasset resident Richard P. Campbell has been elected to serve as Secretary of the Massachusetts Bar Association, the largest attorney's association in the Commonwealth. As secretary, Richard is a member of the MBA's Executive Committee, the governing body of the association. Richard is the founder of Campbell, Campbell & Edwards of Charlestown, where he represents national and international corporations in complex cases including multi-district litigation, class actions, products liability, toxic tort and employment disputes. Richard lives here in town with his wife, Barbara.

HUNGRY PEOPLE

Calling all hungry people!!! This is the last reminder... Don't forget the "New" Pancake breakfast this Sunday at the Deer Hill. Hours are from 8 a.m.-12 p.m. Bring the family and catch up on the news with your friends and if the weather is good, the kids can go play soccer with the Varsity and Junior Varsity players. Don't forget , if you have not purchased your tickets, you can do so at the door. Who knows, maybe you will be one of the lucky winners of the Raffle items that have been so kindly donated! See you there!

That is all the news for this week! Please send any news my way at jenpiep@yahoo.com, 622 CJC Highway or (781)383-1740. I will put the new phone number in next week's column. Please remember to send all those birthdays to me, I have children asking me to not forget them in future columns. Have a great week.

WEDDINGS & ENGAGEMENTS

Jerry White honored at Brown University

Jerry White, who grew up in Cohasset, received the William Rogers Award Sept. 23, in the Andrews dining Hall, Pembroke Campus, Brown University. The William Rogers Award recognizes an outstanding alumnus whose service to society in general would be representative of the words of the Brown Charter: living a life "of usefulness and reputation." The award is an honor recognizing current or important contributions to human kind made by Brown alumnus anywhere in the world.

White, a 1981 CHS graduate, is co-founder and Executive Director of the Washington, DC-based Landmine Survivors Network. He was a student and tourist in Israel when he stepped on a landmine in 1984. For the past ten years, White has worked as an arms control analyst in Washington tracking the spread of weapons of mass destruction (nuclear weapons, chemical/biological weapons and the missiles to deliver them). Through editorials, public speaking, and news interviews, White has helped build public support for stopping the spread of such weapons. In 1997, White became full-time director of the Landmine Survivors Network. A graduate of Brown University, White worked at the Brookings Institution prior to becoming Assistant Director of the DC-based Wisconsin Project on Nuclear Arms Control, a non-profit organization that tracks the sale of dual-use equipment to risky buyers. At the Wisconsin Project, White founded and was editor of an award-winning publication and electronic database that alerts exporters to the risks of selling to buyers that help build nuclear-capable missiles. He has testified before Congress and published articles in the New York Times, Washington Post, Wall Street Journal, Christian Science Monitor and International Herald Tribune.

White's mother, Mimi White, lives on Sheldon Road.

Campbell — Donnelly

Announcement is made of the wedding of Meghan Donnelly, daughter of Bernie and Dianne Donnelly of Hingham, to Mac Campbell, son of John and Linda Campbell of Cohasset, June 10, 2000, at the Second Congregational Church in Cohasset. The Rev. Gary A. Ritts officiated at the ceremony.

The bride was given in marriage by her father.

Attending the bride as maid of honor was Jennifer Millburg of Hingham. Serving as bridesmaids were Catie Campbell of Cohasset, Julie Maffei, Jennifer McCarthy, Alison Reppucci and Lauri Thorne of Hingham.

Performing the duties of best man was Jim Yess of Cohasset. Serving as ushers were Ryan and Patrick Donnelly of Hingham, Mike Burns, Dan DeMichele and John Murphy of Cohasset.

The bride is a graduate of Hingham High School and Dickinson College in Carlisle, Pa. and is employed at Solomon Smith Barney in Boston.

Her husband is a graduate of Cohasset High School and Dickinson College and is employed at Tucker Anthony in Boston.

A reception was held at Atlantica in Cohasset.

After a wedding trip to Hawaii, the couple are living in Cohasset.

AROUND TOWN

APPLE PICKING TIME

Hello everyone! As I start this column, it is starting to get chilly outside, the leaves are beginning to change and apple picking time is here. We are so lucky to have such wonderful seasons, as each one is so different. Make sure to enjoy the season, it will be winter before we know it. I have a lot of great news to share this week, thank you to everyone who sends, calls or emails this to me. Starting next week, make sure to note a new phone number to call in your news.

COLBY ORIENTATION

I had a great message sent to me from Colby College in Waterville, Maine. Jessie L. Zerendow of Cohasset enrolled at Colby College this fall and embarked on a four-day orientation trip to help acclimate her to college life before classes began. Jessie participated in a canoeing and camping trip through the Belgrade chain of lakes in central Maine from Aug. 30-Sept. 2. Jessie traveled with about a dozen other students, including two returning students who were trip leaders. Jessie is the daughter of Donald and Victoria Zerendow. Besides introducing students to outdoor recreation and public service opportunities in Maine, Colby Outdoor Orientation Trips provide a relaxed atmosphere where students can make initial friendships and get their bearings. What a great program to have when you first leave home. It sure sounded like a great time, Jessie. Good luck with your studies.

NEW BABY GIRL

We have some great news from a former Cohasset family! David and Holly(Ludlow) Drake, along with their sons, Wellington and Harrison, would like to welcome their new daughter and sister, Georgia Ally Drake! Georgia was born on Sept. 1 and weighed in at 8 pounds, 14 ounces. Her grandparents are Marcia and Jeff Ludlow and Mary and Richard Drake. I bet she is beautiful and being hugged and cuddled all the time. Congratulations and we are sure that Georgia will be coming to Cohasset to visit her cousins.

DANCE TEACHER RETURNS

The South Shore Community Center is pleased to announce that Sara Wheeler will be returning again this year, to direct our Musical Theater Class. Sara has taught at the Dance Carousel and is presently teaching at Raquelle's Institute of Dance. Sara has also choreographed plays for the Cohasset Drama Club. She is a very versatile and talented teacher and the community center is pleased to have her back again. This year's production for ages 5-6 will be "Little Red Riding Hood." The class will meet on Fridays from 3:15-4:30 p.m. for 12 weeks. "James and the Giant Peach" is the other production for ages 7-10 plus, also on Fridays from 4:30-5:45 p.m. The children will learn many aspects of performing arts including musical theater, improvisational skills, scene study, acting, lip sync, dance and more. If you are interested, please stop at the Community Center or call 383-0088.

BLUEBERRY PICKING

Sandcastles Childcare pre-schoolers Nicole and Brett Tivnan, Megan Kearney and Eric Donovan enjoy an outing to a blueberry patch. Sandcastles is located at 152 King St. in Cohasset.

BC HIGH AWARDS

Three young Cohasset men were recognized with special awards from Boston College High School recently, at an assembly to celebrate and reward the school's underclassmen. Joel R. Carpenter, a sophomore along with David F. Crowley-Buck and Joseph D. Roach, both freshmen were presented the awards from Norman Swain, acting principal of B.C. High. These awards were in Excellence for their outstanding achievement of being the top students in their classes. Joel received his in Human Biology, David in English I Advanced, Biology I and Modern World History and Joseph in Christian Thought, English I and Geometry. Fantastic job, gentlemen!

OFF TO TABOR

Zoe Murray, the daughter of Richard Murray and Deborah Meehan of Cohasset, will be entering Tabor Academy this fall as a new member of the freshmen class. Tabor academy is located in Marion, Mass. and offers new students an opportunity to experience life onboard S.S.V. TABOR BOY, Tabor's 90-foot schooner. Currently, Zoe is participating in Tabor's "Orientation at Sea." Tabor faculty and students are together for six days of sailing, exploring and learning along the coast of Maine. What a great experience for you Zoe, good luck this year!

FIRST BOOK

We have an author in our midst! Sacred Heart High School History teacher, Ella Jane Bruenm, CDP, a native of Cohasset recently had her first book published by Praeger Publications. The book is the product of Sr. Ella Jane's work at Harvard University for a Master's Degree in History. "Through Ordinary Eyes" is a look at the letters that Rufus Robbins wrote back home to his family in South Abington, Mass. during the time of the Civil War. Rufus had enlisted in the Union army at the age of 31, serving with the Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry. The letters help illustrate the hardships that Robbins and others like him had to face as they waited for the fighting to reach their areas. "The thing that touched me the most was just how much of a real person Rufus became to me because of these letters," said Sr. Ella Jane. "They dealt with the things that everyone comes across everyday." For more information on the book, contact Sacred Heart High School Public Relations Officer David Wolcott at (781) 585-7511, Ext. 347.

RAISING THE BAR

Cohasset resident Richard P. Campbell has been elected to serve as Secretary of the Massachusetts Bar Association, the largest attorney's association in the Commonwealth. As secretary, Richard is a member of the MBA's Executive Committee, the governing body of the association. Richard is the founder of Campbell, Campbell & Edwards of Charlestown, where he represents national and international corporations in complex cases including multi-district litigation, class actions, products liability, toxic tort and employment disputes. Richard lives here in town with his wife, Barbara.

HUNGRY PEOPLE

Calling all hungry people!!! This is the last reminder... Don't forget the "New" Pancake breakfast this Sunday at the Deer Hill. Hours are from 8 a.m.-12 p.m. Bring the family and catch up on the news with your friends and if the weather is good, the kids can go play soccer with the Varsity and Junior Varsity players. Don't forget , if you have not purchased your tickets, you can do so at the door. Who knows, maybe you will be one of the lucky winners of the Raffle items that have been so kindly donated! See you there!

That is all the news for this week! Please send any news my way at jenpiep@yahoo.com, 622 CJC Highway or (781)383-1740. I will put the new phone number in next week's column. Please remember to send all those birthdays to me, I have children asking me to not forget them in future columns. Have a great week.

EDITORIAL

Grappling with housing's 'moral crisis'

A housing study released recently details what many first-time home buyers and those with modest incomes already know — prices are up and inventory is down.

Cardinal Bernard Law, the Roman Catholic Archbishop of Boston, commissioned the study and called the results, which demonstrate a serious shortage of affordable housing in the region, a "moral crisis." The results are surprising, but only in the staggering statistics, not the general conclusions. While family incomes rose by 25 percent between 1995 and 1999, the median home price in Greater Boston climbed by 35 percent in the same time, meaning that many potential home buyers — even those making a decent salary — have been priced out of the market. For those who fall below the average family income, the chances of owning a house went from slim to virtually none.

Things have not improved this year toward creating more affordable housing. According to the Massachusetts Association of Realtors, in the first six months of 2000 the average price of a single-family home in Abington, for example, increased more than 45 percent. Some other towns show similar growth in this booming economy: Hingham, 51.3 percent; Cohasset, 63.2 percent and Weymouth,40.7 percent. An in-depth package in today's issue details what's happening with the real estate market.

Law's study offers several recommendations, among them:

Streamlining local zoning and regulatory requirements to enable private developers to build 13,500 market-rate and owner-occupied housing.

Getting cities and towns and the state to make surplus land available for affordable housing while also boosting government subsidies to underwrite construction.

Having local colleges and universities agree to build 7,500 student residences, which will reduce pressure on the rental housing market.

Encouraging church groups, employers, labor unions and other civic groups to provide land and funding for construction, while also putting pressure on communities that resist needed affordable housing.

Use so-called mixed-use zoning districts so apartments can be built above ground-floor shops and offices.

Perhaps the most intriguing suggestion in the study is for the use of mixed-use zoning to create apartments above downtown businesses. Many communities throughout the region are struggling with downtown revitalization efforts; the idea of creating housing in the business district would be an economic boost while meeting the need for increased housing.

Some of the recommendations appear to run contrary to other important municipal priorities. Law's recommendation that available land be used for affordable housing runs in direct conflict to land preservation efforts.

But the housing crisis is real, as this study documents, and the number of cities and towns that meet the state-mandated 10-percent affordable housing benchmark is woefully inadequate. A concerted effort must be made to increase housing, and therefore towns must strike a balance between the preservation of open space, the construction of affordable housing and continuing to allow the real estate market to flourish among these prosperous times.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Train coverage

TO THE EDITOR:

As a prospective resident of the Hingham/Cohasset/Scituate area, I've enjoyed your coverage of Greenbush Line developments, as the outcome of this debate will strongly impact my perceptions about the desirability of living in your community. However, while coverage of spirited 'tea party' rallies makes for good press and sells advertising, your publication — given its visibility within the community — can and should play a much larger role in sponsoring a sober and substantive discussion of the issues. Your readers deserve more than tabloid coverage of sound-bite sloganeering.

Perhaps your publication should sponsor a series of town meetings focusing on the issues (safety, environment, costs, alternatives, etc.) in which supporters/opponents can present their arguments in a reasoned fashion. Or maybe your publication could publish a series of special reports laying out the pros and cons of each argument.

To be successful, democracy demands an informed public. Your publication can't take a backseat in this process.

Gravel pits

TO THE EDITOR:

Dear Mr. Haddad and members of the board of selectmen:

I was disheartened by Monday night's selectmen's meeting regarding the North Main Street Sand Pit Proposal. As an abutter, I went to the meeting to be better informed and get answers to questions about the present and future use of the sand pit. Unfortunately, the only conclusion I could reach was that no one, not the selectmen or the town manager knew that the proposed project being discussed that night had already begun before the meeting even took place.

The sand pit had already been raised and leveled with the "temporary" fill used from the sewer project. Some of the trees which serve as a buffer for noise, dust, and privacy were torn out to make way for a "possible" parking lot and/or additional ball field. For the selectmen to say that the contractors had taken it upon themselves to move forward, on their own, in order to help us out is absurd.

Please let me say that I am not opposed to this proposal, but that it was taken out of our hands and apparently out of the town's hands also. Why bother having a meeting when the choice was already made. I am a concerned neighbor who would like to see this project done properly, with more thought, and the proper impact studies to be sure that this is truly the best solution for the town and all concerned so that it is not something we regret later.

Seniors thanked

TO THE EDITOR:

The treasurer-collector's office would like to thank the following seniors who once again assisted in the preparation of the real estate tax bills for mailing:

Mary Andracchio, Betty Brooke, Barbara Conte, Rosalie Conte, Pat Hanlon, Phyllis Leighton and Steve Leighton.

Also, Sara Marmo, Tillie Nardo, Ronnie Napolitano, Olga Sawchuck, Louise Smullen, Connie Tolman and Peter Tolman.

We truly appreciate their tremendous effort.

Pet Parade

TO THE EDITOR:

The Pet Parade on the common Saturday, Sept. 9, was a huge success! More than 150 kids, dogs, cats, bikes, etc. turned out in full regalia (love that dog in the tutu!) to help raise funds for new playground equipment at the South Shore Community Center.

The Rev. Cutler got things started with a blessing of the pets and he was followed by the Rusty Skippers and Joanne Lehr's Girl Scout troop.... then came the dog and cat bride and groom and more.

All the participants were reviewed by our panel of judges and everyone took home some great prizes thanks to the outstanding generosity of these area businesses: Mike's Deli, Sweet Surprises, Shaw's, The Children's Exchange, Precious Petal Pony Rides, Newport Creamery, Stop & Shop, Buttonwoods, Victoria's Pizza, Par-Tee Indoor Miniature Golf, Good Sport, JJ's Dairy Hut, Silver Spoon, Wilbur's, Maggie's Corner, Cohasset News and Cohasset Cycle Shop. Thanks also to Dwyer's Cleaning, Cohasset Rotary Club, and Cohasset Fire for some necessary supplies.

Additional thanks go to Liz bates, Cindy Kuppens, Mary Larson, Stephanie Church, Susan Jaffe, Lynne Sheridan, Jenna Larson, Kate Kuppens and Michael Kuppens.

We look forward to another parade with dog treats and catnip for all — and the prize patrol will round up more goodies for the kids.

Celebrate community service

The Olympic games now underway in Sydney remind us all of how much we value and admire athletic achievement. We hold our stellar athletes in the highest regard. Professional athletes are paid millions to bat a little white ball or cycle through rough terrain of France.

Our high school athletes — while not making the fortunes of the pros — are held in a similar regard, albeit on a much smaller stage. There are countless awards and trophies bestowed upon our athletes and to a lesser degree those who excel at academics. But in the middle of the super jocks and brainiacs is a whole group of students who excel at being outstanding young citizens. They may be the second-string football player or middle of the road scholar. They may never be the valedictorian or captain of the girls tennis team, yet when it comes to their school, community or church they take a leadership role and stand-out among the crowd.

They are the ones we want to honor as part of Community Newspaper Company's "Spirit of Community" award.

This week we're launching our award program and each month in our South Look section we will recognize a South Shore high school student who has answered the call of community service. We are seeking nominations from the community by way of a ballot you will find on page 15 in South Look or you can log on to our website at townonline.com/south to post your selection on our bulletin board site.

Tell us about a young teen who you know stands out in a church group, or volunteers at a local soup kitchen or maybe serves as a peer leader or mentor for younger children. We want them to get the recognition and praise they deserve. Let's put the spotlight on that kind of valuable community service.

Each month we will solicit your nominations for the award. We will run a story and photo each month in South Look on the individual chosen to receive the award. We'll also be planning a reception for award recipients at the end of the school year (more on that to follow).

Our program can only be successful if it comes directly from you, our readers. So help us honor solid community high school citizens by submitting your entry form today.

Compost! compost! compost!

by Allan MacDonald
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

With the first of our leaves now falling, it's time to think about composting/our compost piles, duplicating and encapsulating the process that we see going on around us. The leaves fall, sheltering the ground and keeping it moist, then gradually decomposing to nurture the next cycle' s growth.

It will always feel odd to me to "throw away" such organics as coffee grounds, vegetable refuse, eggshells, or especially decomposing leaves, if I'm at a place where the people do not compost. I rationalize by saying to myself that the garbage will assist the breakdown of whatever else is thrown away. But with our ever-increasing sensibilities about recycling, looking forward to Pay As You Throw (PAYT), for example, which will take effect this July 2001, we should have less and less to throw away other than garbage, or food scraps.

Meat and bones aren't appropriate for recycling in the backyard because of skunks, dogs, and raccoons, but with the intense humidity we've had, it's been difficult to avoid molding food, which is decomposing organic matter, which is compost.

Just a plug for compost containers here. Your RTF has perfectly practical ones, with directions, on sale for $25. First building on your right. Near the paint shed, where on Saturday, Sept. 30, from 9 a.m. to 12 p.m. we'll be collecting old paint as well as hazardous wastes. See you there.

And see you next time.

Allan MacDonald is publicity chairman for the Cohasset Recycling Committee.

LIBRARY CORNER

Friends of the library

The Friends of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library was founded in 1968 as an organization of volunteers who originally gave many hours of help to the library, delivering books to nursing homes and shut-ins, sponsoring programs at the library, organizing book sales, purchasing books and furnishings for the library, and improving communications between the library and the Cohasset community.

The Friends have since expanded its role in the community and have provided passes to numerous museums including the Science Museum, the Museum of Fine Arts, the Kennedy Library and Plimoth Plantation, and more. All of these passes are available on a first-come basis by contacting the library 24 hours ahead of the day needed.

The Children's Room continues to receive great support from Cohasset families. The Friends of the Library provide wonderful summer programs like this year's, "The Magic Door" which was a high-spirited program of musical selections inspired by the classics for young people. The ever-popular "Puzzle Club" continued this summer with Deer Hill Librarian, Marge Murphy, at the helm.

Art exhibits, through the efforts of the South Shore Art Center, continue to enrich the library on a monthly basis. It is a tremendous opportunity for all residents to view an often local artist at leisure and for young and old to have exposure to a "gallery" setting each month.

The goal of the Friends of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library remains to support and enhance library services in various capacities. New members are welcome and anyone who is interested may contact the library at 383-1348.

STORY HOUR UPDATE

Suzanne Terry, children's librarian, still has openings for Children's Story Hour on Thursday afternoons at 1 p.m. beginning Oct. 5 and continuing Oct., 12, 19, 26 and Nov. 2 and 9. The other session for Friday mornings is filled but you can put your child's name on a waiting list.

Each 45-minute program consists of several picture book stories and a simple craft project. Children must be at least 3-1/2 years of age to register.

For more information contact the children's librarian at 383-1348.

What you need to know about foxes

In response to the numerous calls I have received over the past weeks, I have asked The Mariner to reproduce this information on foxes. Please call me at 383-9119 with any sightings so I can track the movement of these animals around the town.

ANIMAL CONTROL

PAUL MURPHY 383-9119

People may be surprised and sometimes frightened to discover that foxes live in their neighborhoods, but these fears are almost completely groundless. Foxes are not dangerous to humans in any sense, except when they are rabid (which is rare) or have been captured and are being handled. Even then, it takes a lot of handling for a fox to even defend itself by biting, and the natural tendency is for the animal to flee rather than fight. Red foxes will occasionally prey on small house cats or kittens, and certainly will take small animals such as rabbits and guinea pigs when they are left outside unprotected. Both red and gray foxes will eat grapes, raspberries, windfall persimmons, apples and other fruit, but garden vegetables are usually not bothered. In all, foxes do such little damage and engage in so few conflicts with people that we hesitate to characterize them as problem animals at all.

TOLERANCE

Sometimes foxes are blamed for damage they did not cause. The trash can that was knocked over by the neighborhood dogs or a visiting raccoon may attract a fox who is observed and then blamed for their nuisance. Foxes may cut through yards when moving from one hunting area to another, and the homeowner often becomes concerned over what they are doing. In fact, they need not be bothered at all and, if left alone, will probably do the homeowner a service by performing free rodent control on their way by.

EXCLUSION

Outdoor pets such as rabbits and poultry should be protected by housing them in secure hutches or pens that are built to withstand any effort by foxes, raccoons or dogs to break in. Because all these animals will dig under fences, it is important to make sure that an 8-inch or greater L-shaped footer on this outer perimeter is buried at least a foot deep. Electric fences can also be effective in excluding all of the species that might be attracted to poultry or small animals, but these are best when used in conjunction with other permanent perimeter fencing. The electric fence could be single-strand and placed in front of a perimeter fence to enhance the effect of repelling as well as excluding any inquisitive predator.

REPELLENTS

No repellents are registered expressly for use in repelling foxes, although the many products sold to repel domestic dogs from yards and gardens will undoubtedly have a similar effect on a passing fox.

SCARE DEVICES

Because they are active mostly by night and are very cautious about people when out and about, foxes are rarely seen by suburbanites. Noise-making devices, ranging from transistor radios to the motion-sensitive alarms that are on the market can be quite effective in combining repelling and harassing strategies. The automatic sprinkler system can be an effective deterrent for lawns or gardens. Even a loud voice or the banging of a pan or dish can frighten these very sensitive animals and keep them out of an area where they are not wanted. Any sound or sight (that is the least threatening) will cause their retreat.

HARASSMENT

Foxes that have made dens under porches and decks are one of the most common problems homeowners experience with these animals. As with all such situations, we recommend tolerance until the young are old enough to follow the parents on nightly forays, then exclusion to keep them from reusing the den. In fact, the kits will spend time playing and loafing outside the den just before they are able to go out with their parents. This is one of the most enjoyable wildlife viewing experiences people can have. Grab a camera and take a picture.

However, some people want the family to move. In these cases, mild harassment may encourage a move. Start with placing objects or moving leaves, soil or mulch around to disturb the denning animals. Ammonia-soaked rags placed at the entrance of a burrow or around the place where animals come and go under the porch may encourage their leaving. Anything with a human scent will alarm the foxes as well, and some have recommended putting smelly sweat socks or old sneakers around the area where foxes come and go. Recently, some people have claimed success in getting fox families to move by using scare balloons mounted about 2 to 3 feet off the ground, just outside the entrance to the den. In all of these strategies the idea is to make the parents uncomfortable and get them to move the litter — after that, make sure the move has occurred before trying to exclude them.

HABITAT MANAGEMENT

Food lures foxes into suburban yards. Compost piles should never receive meat scraps, and garbage should be placed outside only the morning of collection. If that is not possible, the cans must be secured from access. This can be done by simply providing tight-fitting lids if only foxes are involved, or more secure fasteners if other, more persistent trash specialists such as the raccoon are involved. A cord threaded through the handle of the lid and hooked onto the sides of the can is a simple yet effective tactic. Dishes of pet food should not be left outside overnight.

Foxes will be attracted to bird feeders and may even eat spilled sunflower seeds if hungry enough. Mostly, however, the sight of a fox around a feeder suggests that the spillage is being used by rodents, who have left their scent there and attracted the fox to the site.

DO FOXES EAT CATS?

People are frequently concerned about their pets being outdoors when foxes are around. We do not recommend that cats be allowed to roam freely, and suggest that the best way to avoid encounters between foxes and cats is to keep the cat indoors. By and large, however, foxes seem to pay little heed to adult cats, recognizing that they are dealing with an animal that is almost their size (often) and certainly one that has a well-deserved reputation for self-defense. Kittens, however, could be easy prey for a fox, as might small adult cats; therefore, caution is suggested whenever the two might come into contact.

Nudity the 'in' thing in 2000

A few months ago, the Ohio State women's rugby team posed topless in front of the Lincoln Memorial in Washington for a photo they planned to print on the front of a T-shirt and sell it to raise money for the team.

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

The folks in charge of the spoil sport institution of higher learning they represented promptly suspended the team and called off the rest of the season. Wassa matter with these people? Don't they know that nudity is here to stay?

That inescapable fact dawned on me the other day when I read that the Climax Gentleman's Club in Salem Township, Penn., has a drive-through window for customers, just like the Fleet Bank, Dunkin' Donuts, and that wedding chapel in Reno.

For $5 a minute, the motorist can pull up to the drive-through window and watch a woman take off her clothes and dance in the altogether. Most cars stay for two minutes, and it is said that most of the customers are couples, carloads of women, and college kids.

I tell you they are all around us, these devotees of the new nudity.

And to think that as little as (word indecipherable) years ago, when I was an inquisitive eighth-grader, you had to seek the same knowledge in the pages of a National Geographic magazine hidden inside a McGuffey's Reader.

This fact of modern living apparently has escaped Wisconsin State Rep DuWayne Johnsrud, who complained that a toll-free phone call to a Department of Natural Resources line gets a recorded message promoting a state-owned, clothing-free beach.

"Someone should lose their job for inviting people to go out there and run naked at one of the most heavily used public areas in the state," fumed Johnsrud. The department gets only about a hundred similar complaints a summer.

Complaints came from the other side in Rio De Janeiro when gun-toting police decided to enforce the law against public nudity for the first time in 70 years by arresting a woman who was sunbathing topless and jailing her for eight hours.

After days of protest and demonstrations, they gave up and called off the ban.

A group of ladies, members of the Women's Institute in rural Rylstone, England, ages 45 to 66, raised more than $540,000 to fight leukemia by posing for a 2000 calendar wearing nothing but strings of pearls. They were tasteful, genteel poses, they said.

"When they had their clothes off, they actually looked younger," marveled one who has seen the calendar. Now there's a ringing endorsement of geriatric nudity.

I tell you they are all around us, these devotees of the new nudity.

There's Brandi Chastain, who scored the game-winning goal for the US women's soccer team against China, doffing her shirt in celebration — and disappointing the panting males in the TV audience by wearing the latest Nike sports bra.

A new television news show in Russia, of all places, has anchorwomen who remove their clothing while they deliver the news.

"The show is reportedly popular with those who want to keep abreast of the news."

All right, I admit I lifted that line from Marianne Means, the columnist for the Hearst Newspapers, who admits she lifted it from a London newspaper that probably heard it while watching the news on the telly in a neighborhood pub.

Village thoughts

TO THE EDITOR:

Your town — your village

Revitalization! What does it mean? What is it? What started it? Who started it? Why? Do we need to be revitalized?

Webster says that "revitalization" means "to give new life or vigor to." Do we need to be revitalized? I don't think so — the village is full of "new life and vigor." Sit on a bench anytime and just watch/look.

Maybe we need to renovate or refurbish it ourselves. Webster again renovate — "to restore to a former better state." Refurbish — "to brighten or freshen up."

We have a village that is vibrant - interesting - different - quaint? Yes — unique in its history. Look at - walk it - read up on it - enjoy it - talk to people - shop - sit and look, listen, rest, think - but mainly experience Cohasset Village in a way only this village can be.

Let's go back to those words — renovate/refurbish. Certainly after 100 years you and I - your home - the village can stand some paint - some redoing of the sidewalks - the street - small things like the rubbish containers - the posts for the hydrants - some new signs (some can come down) - other incidentals that I'll think of - you'll think of - but - and here's that question again - "Do we need to be revitalized?" You answer that question yourself.

Do we want to look like someone else? Do we need to be torn apart and put back together again to look like Rockport, Ogunquit, Nantucket, Bar Harbor, Newburyport? I don't think so. I have nothing against those towns, villages mentioned — they're beautiful in their own way and that's the way Cohasset should be. I don't mean leaving a pothole - a broken fence - a dead tree — yes fix them. I do mean leaving alone a wooded area that's developed naturally - a street that's working perfectly - sidewalks that are walkable - street lights that work and are easily maintained - and so on. You get the idea.

What I am trying to say is let's look at our village in a different way. How can we, the residents, do what we want to do? Think, should be done - ourselves.

We have and are taking care of our sidewalks - our streets with the aid of certain state funds through the effort of our own DPW - Harold and crew.

Look at the past years. Have we wanted for good roads? No! Have we wanted for sidewalks? No! We have added sidewalks where needed. These things are taken care of by our own efforts — no outside advice needed. We have and are maintaining our trees and parks without outside assistance. If you, as a resident, have comments/complaints regarding a road - sidewalk - tree- lightpole or the like - you call the town manager - the board of selectmen - the proper department. Your actions are the result of your own thinking. Cohasset - the village - the town - is yours not someone else's. You are responsible for Cohasset.

I'm afraid when I hear, see, what is being proposed by the CRC that you, your neighbor, myself are being left out. We're told differently. We're invited to attend their meetings - comment - tell them what we want - but the plans are drawn - and that's it - what you see is what you get.

I'm afraid of costs. Where is the money coming from? There's no real definitive answer. You're told that cost is not the first consideration. A revitalized Cohasset Village is more important than cost. And here's where I go back to the start.

Do we need to be revitalized? By someone else. By an outsider. By one, (a group) who think they have the only answers. I don't think so. I think that the town of Cohasset — the village of Cohasset — should be looked at and renovated/refurbished where needed. I think the citizens/residents of Cohasset — both old and new — know what they want and can accomplish the task themselves.

You, as a citizen/resident are important to this whole picture. Your thoughts are crucial, meaningful. No one knows what you are thinking if you don't say so. Write to your town manager - your board of selectmen. Tell them what you think. Your town - your village are important. You are important.

No quick fix for housing woes

Market clouded by range of issues, from empty-nester to zoning laws

By John Gregg
CNC STAFF WRITER

Four years ago, most young families looking to buy a modest starter home in the greater Boston region found $150,000 to be a typical price. Today, it would be a typographical error.

With the economy booming and many aging baby boomers also looking for new digs, the cost of housing in the region now exceeds the speculative heights reached during the go-go '80s.

The good news for those who already bought a suburban slice of the American dream is that the real estate market grew at a steadier, more stable pace this time around. The bad news, for people looking to buy in, is that prices are not expected to go down any time soon.

Even more frustrating for prospective buyers, communities that once served as lower-cost alternatives to neighboring cities or towns are also considerably more expensive.

Somerville and Medford are now seen as trendy alternatives to Cambridge. Quincy is no longer a cheap safety valve for middle-class families from Boston. And if South Natick and Wellesley are considered especially pricey, Framingham is no hidden bargain.

Ranch houses that sold for less than $15,000 when built 40 years ago — about $85,000 in today's dollars — now sell for more than $200,000 in many outlying suburbs, a steep price for a starter home.

"I can't speak for what it was like 50 years ago, but this is the worst housing crisis in my lifetime, and I'm 40 years old," said Tom Callahan, the executive director of the Massachusetts Affordable Housing Alliance.

"This is more severe than the one in the '80s. There's been a steadier build-up to the peak level, which is scarier, because it's arguable more sustainable. Instead of 37 percent appreciation in one year, we've had several years of 12 to 15 percent appreciation in sales prices or rent."

Throughout suburban Boston, home prices have soared dramatically in the past five years as the economy booms.

In communities like Weymouth, Medford and Milford — long considered affordable suburbs — the price of even modest single-family homes are rising beyond the reach of many working families.

In Boston, the median price of a single-family home increased by 74 percent from 1996 to June 2000, to $235,000, according to the MLS Property Information Network.

In Newton, according to the MLS PIN, median prices over that span rose 49.9 percent, to $508,750. In Medford, almost 56 percent, to $244,000. The median home price in Milford this year reached $208,444, a 37 percent increase since 1996. And in Weymouth, the median sales price is now $192,750, a 40.7 percent increase since the mid-1990s.

Such prices are forcing many families to move from a beloved hometown to a more affordable community, buy a house they might not want, or find other housing options altogether.

Even empty-nesters who already have the equity of their own home are frustrated in their attempts to move down to a more manageable house.

Many sellers are reluctant to even put their homes on the market, knowing that they may have trouble finding an affordable house to buy. That fear only compounds supply-and-demand woes.

"The inventory problem is real, and part of it is the higher interest rates," said Karl Case, a Wellesley College economics professor who specializes in the greater Boston housing market. "If I'm going to put my house on the market and I'm sitting on a 6.5 percent mortgage and I'll have to roll to 8 percent, I'm not going to do that."

Prospective homeowners throughout the region are hit by a triple whammy that drives up prices.

The strong economy is attracting workers with money to spend for new homes. The high cost of land and construction in Massachusetts gives developers little incentive to build anything but luxury housing that offers greater profits. And the state's status as a thriving educational and high-technology center attracts tens of thousands of students and young singles who want their own apartments, further fueling demand.

Compounding the problem are deeper changes throughout society. Widowed grandparents who once would have moved in with family members now remain in their own homes and apartments. Recent graduates who previously lived at home are instead leaving the nest and setting up their own living quarters. And more adults are now divorced or single parents living on their own.

The phenomenon, known as household formation, means fewer people are living in the average housing unit.

"The city of Boston actually has more housing units and less people than it did 30 years ago," Callahan said. "The reason is a fairly dramatic shift in the number of people per housing unit."

Callahan said he knows of one three-decker, the prototypical Boston housing unit, with just three occupants. In an earlier generation, one of the current residents shared the house with 11 family members.

"That gets played out over and over in greater Boston," Callahan said.

While homeowners who long ago locked in reasonable interest rates and modest monthly payments clearly benefit from rising prices, the high cost of housing can slowly sap the vitality of many communities by pricing out the middle-income workers who teach school or police the streets in such towns.

Earlier this month, Bernard Cardinal Law, the Roman Catholic Archbishop of Boston, released a blue-ribbon report that labeled the housing shortage a "moral crisis" and called for the creation of 36,000 new housing units over the next five years.

"We face the equivalent of a natural disaster such as a destructive hurricane or flood," the report said. "Thousands of housing units that many families could afford have 'disappeared' from the housing stock. Physically, those units are still standing, but for these families they might just as well have been destroyed by wind or flood."

Case, the Wellesley professor who also studies housing prices for the Federal Reserve, said many would-be homebuyers are forced to look for affordable homes in Lowell, Lawrence, Brockton and Fall River, cities not known for their school districts.

"This boom started in more desirable communities, and it's spreading now, because it's pricing everybody out of those markets," Case said.

The median house price in Lowell, which has enjoyed a revival in recent years, was $139,950 in June, a 47 percent increase since 1996.

"For someone with a modest salary, you have to look in the mill towns and look for bargains," Case said. "The sad thing is you are not going to get into one of the better school districts and more affluent towns for less than a small fortune. What it means is we are getting more homogenized by income by where we live."

Such concerns are held by government officials and housing activists across the political spectrum.

Aaron Gornstein, the executive director of the Citizens Housing and Planning Association, said many developers are building only high-end, luxury housing that "is not satisfying the demand of the middle class."

"It is a monumental problem affecting the suburban communities, and is affecting people who may have grown up there and are working there and can't afford to live there anymore," said Gornstein.

Suburbs which once offered affordable housing, but a longer commute, have also become even more attractive as more jobs moved from the city.

"There's 110 million square feet of office space, and 50 million is in the suburbs, so people are working everywhere," Case said. "Boston is hardly the monocentric city it was 20 years ago."

Fred Meyer, the president of the Massachusetts Association of Realtors, said he has seen dramatic changes recently from his perch at University Real Estate in the heart of Cambridge.

"I've added Malden to my Web site," said Meyer. "I have 37 years in the business, and I never did sales in Malden and Everett until the last two years. Now I do, because they are more affordable."

Meanwhile, industry experts said they expect the cost of buying a home will continue to rise, albeit at a slower growth rate. And the supply of homes to meet demand remains a problem.

Planning key to meeting demand for town services

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Over the next 20 years, Southeast Massachusetts can expect 10,000 new residents per year, warns Donald Connors, chairman of Vision 2020.

The regional planning task force has been visiting local communities with hopes of educating cities and towns in proper growth and development planning methods to deal with increased demand on town services.

What type of demand would worst-case, full-buildout scenarios place on the small coastal towns making up a majority of the South Shore? With a larger population, an increased demand for water, sewer, police and fire protection, and quality schools, the result could be either towns cutting corners in order to afford all the demands, or overtaxing its residents.

The worst-case scenarios have hardly unfolded on the South Shore; out of four area towns surveyed only two were being forced to scramble a bit to meet full demand for certain services.

"We've now been chronically short of water for years," said Braintree Planning Director Peter LaPolla. Along with the towns of Randolph and Holbrook, Braintree recently approved a $500,000 reservoir dredging problem to reduce the towns' water problems. Interestingly, the water shortage isn't the result of a growing population, rather just an increase in water use. "We haven't been experiencing the drastic increase in population. In fact we've lost population from the 1980s," he said.

"It's mostly turnover from older people leaving and young families coming in. So the increased demand (on town services) is not on the fire department or the police department or town hall or DPW, it's on the schools...More students mean more teachers."
Cohasset Town Manager Mark Haddad

LaPolla said when Braintree experienced massive suburban sprawl in the 1950s and '60s, most families had at least four kids. The current trend is for smaller families, so though the amount of housing units (houses, apartments, townhouses) being built in Braintree has been growing at a rate of 20 to 25 a year, the population hasn't been growing.

Cohasset has been experiencing modest growth partly as a result of new housing developments, but mainly because of a demographic turnover, said Town Manager Mark Haddad.

"It's mostly turnover from older people leaving and young families coming in," he said. "So the increased demand (on town services) is not on the fire department or the police department or town hall or DPW, it's on the schools...More students mean more teachers."

One need look no further than the town budget to see where the monetary focus has been in Cohasset. Over the past two financial years, the town's overall budget — not including school funding — has increased 5.31 percent. Education funding has increased 14.49 percent in that same time, and the town will be undergoing a $40 million school renovation project starting this spring.

Hull also is renovating its schools, but mainly because they just need to be updated. "It's one of those things you have to do regardless [of a population increase]," said Town Administrator Phil Lemnios. "And renovations require expansion."

The state Education Reform Act passed in 1993 set a minimum requirement for classroom size in new school construction projects.

Lemnios said Hull's population has been steady at its current 10,000 residents. Even if full build-out occurs, just an additional 1,500 people could squeeze in. Hull finds itself in a unique position. Because the town was heavily developed during its heyday as a summer tourist beach town in the early 1900s, not much empty space exists to build on.

"The population is pretty stable. The town has always geared its services toward summer and a year-round dichotomy," he said. "Though the summer population is actually diminishing, we've always had the services in place."

In Norwell, Town Administrator Jim Boudreau said the town's population has "hovered right around 10,000" despite having a bit more undeveloped land available than in water-locked Hull, or on the granite hills of Cohasset.

He said the town has been having more homes built, and thinks the steady population is the result of smaller families. But he said the town is experiencing small demands in things such as open/recreational space, more roadways and an increase in police staffing.

Lately Boudreau said an issue of concern, like in Braintree, has been water availability. "Every year there is something to keep an eye on," he explained.

Boudreau thought the town is well prepared for handling an increased town population, and the demands that come with it. "If you plan for it [growth] you will be in good shape, and that's what we've been doing," he said. "The town does a good job in providing basic

Comprehensive permits one avenue to affordable housing

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

Hingham isn't the only South Shore community not meeting the state's affordable housing standards. Most of them don't.

After years of offering virtually no housing in that category, a number of developers have completed or are offering development proposals in Hingham that include some affordable housing. But some feel it's coming at a price to the community and abutters — in the form of comprehensive permit applications.

The state Comprehensive Permit Law streamlines a town's approval process through a single comprehensive permit from the local zoning board of appeals for developers who include affordable or mixed-income housing in their plans.

The permit process was enacted by the Legislature more than 30 years ago in recognition of the fact that many Massachusetts communities have failed in the past to meet their state-mandated obligation to provide 10 percent affordable housing among their housing stock.

The process allows developers willing to provide affordable housing to virtually circumvent local regulations governing standard types of subdivisions.

Of paramount concern to residents living in areas where this kind of development is proposed is the impact high-density housing will have on areas of single-family homes. Additional traffic usually tops the list of concerns. Depending on the project, wetlands, protection of aquifers and flood plain issues sometimes surface as well.

Hingham planning board chairman Sarah Corey, speaking from her personal viewpoint , said protecting abutters and other residents is paramount.

"If a plan isn't acceptable in terms of traffic and drainage and impacts the community in a way that is unacceptable, we have to be up front about that," she said.

Corey is a supporter of affordable housing, however, and thinks there are places where comprehensive permits could work — but not in areas that are difficult to develop.

In Scituate, Kent Village was approved under the comprehensive permit process in the early 1980s, despite stiff community opposition.

The zoning board denied the permit because it felt the bylaws did not allow the density of housing proposed. The matter was appealed to the state and ended up in the United States Supreme Court.

Today the development still stands.

But overall, Scituate still lacks substantial affordable housing opportunities for individuals and families of low and moderate incomes.

According to Scituate Zoning Board of Appeals chairman Wallace Arcand, at least a couple of developments which were presented under the comprehensive permit process

Creating a housing trust fund

By Jeanne M. Rideout
JRIDEOUT@CNC.COM

Melissa is single working mother. She holds down a full-time job, bringing in $20,000 a year.

Today she is camping with her family, but not for fun.

Missy lives in a tent in a campground with her three children because she can't find an apartment she can afford. She helps work off the fee at the campground by cleaning the bathrooms at the community hall.

The campground does have a time limit that families can stay, but knowing her situation, and because she is willing to work, they let Missy stay on.

With the cold weather setting in, the young mother doesn't know where she and her children are going to go.

Missy's story is being played out all over the South Shore.

Statistics show time and time again that need for affordable housing is steadily increasing, as demand drives up prices and developers respond by building pricey mini-mansions.

At the same time, there is currently a $5 billion surplus within the federal housing agency that is being pulled out of the housing budget and spent on other programs.

"There is not one metropolitan area in the country where a person making the minimum wage can afford to pay the rent for a two-bedroom apartment, and new studies indicate the problem in Massachusetts has only gotten worse."
U.S. Sen. John F. Kerry

In response to this need, U.S. Senator John F. Kerry, D-Mass., is striving to create a nationwide housing trust fund.

"This is a critical time in my effort to create a National Housing Trust Fund to help create more affordable housing options for Americans up and down the income spectrum," Kerry said. "From very low income families teetering on the brink of homelessness, to families making the minimum wage, all the way up to middle class families struggling to buy that first home, millions of Americans are struggling with housing, and this fall — without raising taxes, without new programs or new bureaucracy — we could help them get ahead."

Kerry's bill S 2997 would increase the funding of the federal housing budget by $2.5 billion, most of which would be passed on to states to build affordable housing for those who need it most.

"This money should go into a trust fund to be available for building more affordable housing and for the creation of home ownership in low and moderate-income neighborhoods," Kerry said. "That's why I'm lobbying the White House and Secretary (Anthony) Cuomo to pass my Housing Trust Fund. I've made the case in Congress that while many Americans have prospered in the South Shore, housing is getting to be a difficult issue — she said she feels some members of her generation are being forced from their homes because of the escalation of real estate prices in the region.

Although the South Shore and other parts of the state are prospering from the state of the economy, many senior citizens are indeed failing to see the benefits.

The costs for purchasing and renting homes have risen sufficiently since 1995, and those people on fixed incomes — senior citizens in particular — are finding that they can no longer afford the homes which they've lived in for any number of years.

And what's more, some of those same seniors who are being forced to sell their homes are finding that affordable housing units for seniors are few and far between on the South Shore.

"Housing for the elderly is tight," said Marshfield Council on Aging director Carol Connolly. "It's not always available to the people who need it. There are huge waiting lists that come with getting into senior housing complexes."

"Each community on the South Shore has about 150 units of affordable housing available (for seniors)," said state Rep. Frank Hynes, D-Marshfield. "Some have more, some have less. But that's not enough units to provide people with a sense of security."

Marshfield's Rhodes looks at it as if the aging population is being left out.

"The situation is terrible," Rhodes said. "It's like people in my generation are getting thrown away."

When Rhodes put her Marshfield home on the market, she started looking around for affordable senior housing — a condominium or an assisted living facility of some sort. Rhodes said she put herself on different "waiting lists" for a few senior housing establishments around the region.

"When I started looking at different places (around the South Shore), I found that everything was just so expensive. Of course, buying a place costs a great deal, but renting a place is not cheap either…especially when you're on a fixed income."

When her Marshfield home sold and the new owners wanted to move in, Rhodes faced a problem.

"I didn't have anywhere to go," she said, noting none of her waiting-list spots had come through. "Luckily, my children helped me find a nice trailer park in the town of Carver. I bought a trailer with the money I got selling my home. It's nice an quiet, but it's not as convenient as it was living in Marshfield."

Rhodes said she feels she is lucky she found somewhere to live in a spur-of-the-moment situation. She said she feels there needs to be a greater awareness regarding the amount of affordable housing available for seniors.

"People should think of us senior citizens more," Rhodes said. "I don't think any of the towns on the South Shore would be as prosperous as they are today without us."

Cook said she also looked into senior housing, where she said, one is allowed to pay according to one's fixed income, but like Rhodes she discovered that waiting lists were just too long.

"I like where I live now, but I would've definitely stay put in Marshfield if it was possible," Cook said. "I worked for 30 years and spent every penny trying to maintain that place (in Marshfield). Still, I had to sell it. I sometimes think, 'why did I bother working all those years?'"

Betsy Currier, the regional vice president of the Massachusetts Association of Realtors, said prices for real estate on the South Shore have indeed escalated over the past few years, but she indicated that they have by no means "skyrocketed."

"Prices (to own a home) are 12 to 15 percent higher right now than during the same period of time last year," she said. "People are finding more and more that the South Shore is a great place to live, and that's why prices go up. Prices are higher this year, but at this time next year, I don' think they will be as high as they are now—it won't be as hot a market."

Currier said a recent report from the Massachusetts Association of Realtors indicate the average price for a single-family home on the South Shore right now is $280,357. During the same time of the season in 1999, the price was $222,005.

Currier said the average price for a condominium on the South Shore during the second quarter of 1999 was $123,434. Currently, the average selling price for one of those is $126,312.

Tom Callahan, the executive director of the Massachusetts Affordable Housing Alliance in Dorchester, said the problem of rising real estate costs has been around for awhile.

"Costs started rising in 1995," he said. "But it started getting really severe in 1996. It's definitely a phenomenon that is not only affecting senior citizens, but young couples too."

Callahan said he thinks prices for real estate on the South Shore are a bit too much for the area's senior citizens to handle, but he also said the issue of building more affordable senior housing also needs to be addressed.

"There is public housing available for seniors, but most of those waiting lists are just out of control," he said. "The state needs to get back in the business of building affordable housing for seniors."

Diane Cook locks the door at her new condo in Pembroke.

Callahan said his organization is a statewide coalition that works on increasing affordable housing across the state, and he said the organization's mission is far from accomplished.

"No one program is going to solve this (lack of affordable housing) problem," Callahan said. "And I have a feeling that real estate prices on the South Shore are going to stay the way they are for a while."

"The lack of affordable housing out there for senior citizens is omnipresent," said Hynes. "It has always been a problem, but it has heightened in this prosperous economy along with the prices for real estate. This is a problem for the region's elderly, and the legislature is starting to recognize that."

Hynes said there are various programs being initiated by the state regarding finding ways to reduce certain taxes to provide elderly homeowners with some sort of relief, but he said he does not disagree with the fact that affordable housing for senior citizens is lacking on the South Shore, and that it is an issue demanding immediate attention.

"There's no silver bullet solution," Hynes said, "but I think the first step is that there needs to be a greater awareness and understanding of these kinds of problems which senior citizens are facing."

Her new trailer is spacious, but can't replace Lucy Rhodes' home in Marshfield where she lived for 57 years.

services, but we'll always get people that complain."

Hull and Cohasset recently joined up to do just that – prepare and plan for the future. The towns have agreed to split the cost of a full-time planner, Elizabeth Harrington, so both towns can get official master growth plans.

Cohasset has been trying to keep ahead of the curve until that plan is in place. Haddad pointed to the school projects, a move toward a full-time town paramedic division, revamped maintenance department to keep the towns investments looking nice, and later this month, the town will celebrate the conclusion of a massive sewer installation project in town.

"The people of Cohasset want a high level of services and we've taken steps to do that," Haddad said. "And if we weren't doing the job, you can be sure we'd hear about it."

this booming economy, one unfortunate side effect has been a tight housing market that leaves too many working people without a decent and safe place to live."

The need for affordable housing stretches coast-to-coast.

"There is not one metropolitan area in the country where a person making the minimum wage can afford to pay the rent for a two-bedroom apartment, and new studies indicate the problem in Massachusetts has only gotten worse," Kerry said. "For working families living paycheck to paycheck, one unforeseen circumstance, a sick child, a car repair bill, can send them into homelessness. We have the resources we need to ensure that all Americans have the opportunity to live in decent and safe housing, yet we are not devoting these resources to fix the problem. We can make a significant down-payment on fixing our nation's housing problems this fall by passing my Housing Trust Fund into law."

Kerry introduced legislation to create the National Housing Trust Fund at the end of July. The bill has bipartisan support.

Money for the housing trust fund would come from profits created by the Federal Housing Authority mortgage insurance program, now being diverted from the housing budget into other programs.

The FHA offers mortgage insurance, a program making $2 billion to $3 billion a year in profits. The profits are created because the premiums collected for the mortgage insurance are greater than the losses covered.

This was not always a profit-making program.

In 1990, the FHA mortgage insurance program was essentially insolvent. Losses and expected losses were greater than the balance. Reforms mandated that year now require the FHA to keep on hand in federal reserves 2 percent of the amount of money insured.

For example, if the FHA insures $100,000 in mortgage insurance, $2,000 goes into federal reserves at the treasury department to cushion future losses.

The 1990 reforms have led to an increase in FHA reserves.

Delortte and Touche, the largest public accounting company in the country, each year since 1990 has assessed all the factors affecting the program and projects how the fund will do.

Because of reform, better management, and a strong economy, the FHA mortgage insurance program is now in an extremely strong condition, with this year's reserves at 3.66 percent and growing, according to Sen. Kerry.

But for the past five years, these profits created within the federal housing agency funding mechanism have not been used for housing.

Since 1995, money has been pulled out of the reserves to fund other programs, such as the space station, hurricane relief, and deficit reduction. From Fiscal Year 1995 to 1999, $20 billion has been taken out of the federal housing budget for other programs. Meanwhile, the need for affordable housing has increased. People working full time can't afford an apartment, let alone home ownership.

Kerry believes these billions of dollars belong in the trust fund to build affordable housing.

To make sure the FHA mortgage insurance program stays solvent, Kerry's legislation would cap reserves at 3 percent. At the end of each year, anything beyond 3 percent would be transferred to the housing trust fund.

This year, with the reserves at 3.66 percent, the .66 percent would mean $6 billion transferred to the housing trust fund to create affordable housing on the South Shore and across the country.

The bulk of the money in the housing trust fund would be sent to the states based on the housing need. The federal Department of Housing and Urban Development would determine the level of need in each state. One indicators of housing need is the number of persons paying 50 percent or above of their income for rent. Another indicator is the age of the housing stock.

HUD would distribute the money to the states, and the states would provide matching funds to local grant recipients.

States would be given freedom to distribute the money received from the trust fund as local housing officials saw fit.

"You have to give the states room to make it work," Kerry said.

Under the housing trust fund legislation, states would hold a competition to see how the money is used. A variety of groups could apply to the state for a share of the housing trust money: local towns, local non-profit and not-for-profit organizations, and developers.

There are just two rules in the competition.

The first rule is that the housing trust funds are primarily to be used to serve people needing affordable housing, defined as families earning 30 percent of the area median income.

However, the goal is not to build "big projects with very poor people," Kerry said. Projects built with Housing Trust Fund money have to be mixed-income.

The second rule is that the developer or group receiving funding must agree to keep rents low for the next 40 years.

Up to 25 percent of the Housing Trust Fund money could be used for home ownership for low- and moderate-income families.

There was a hearing Tuesday, Sept. 12, before the Congressional Banking Committee's subcommittee on the housing trust fund bill. Kerry is the senior Democrat on the housing subcommittee. Kerry is also meeting with White House staff.

"The Senator is very committed to this bill," staff spokesperson Jonathan Miller said.

But time is growing short.

"It's going to be a very, very tough thing to get the bill through this year, because there only three to four more weeks for this Congress to be in session," Miller said.

have fallen through due to financing difficulties. During his 13 years on the board, Arcand notes there haven't been many applications for comprehensive permits.

Despite the fact that the comprehensive permit review is less stringent than those which fall under the normal review process, Arcand said the Scituate ZBA takes seriously the recommendations set forth by other town boards, even though the ZBA makes the final decision.

Another comprehensive permit was sought and granted last year for multi-unit condominiums along the Driftway, according to Arcand.

In order to qualify for affordable housing, a family of four can make as much as $47,800, or 80 percent of the area's median income of $62,700.

Hingham currently has only 166 housing units that qualify by state standards as being affordable, subsidized housing.

As buildable land in Hingham and other South Shore communities becomes more and more scarce, developers often find the comprehensive permit an attractive way to construct more units than otherwise would be allowed. In exchange, they must set aside 25 percent of the project as affordable housing.

In 1998, developer Michael Intoccia proposed 150 units of housing on Baker Hill under the comprehensive permit process when a plan to develop the 90-acre parcel with about 40 homes failed to pass muster with town boards.

However, after much discussion, a much smaller subdivision plan was ultimately approved under the normal review process.

At about the same time, developer Thomas Corcoran proposed 130 units off Charles Street when a plan for 35 homes on the 68-acre parcel was rejected by the town.

But, again, after renewed efforts on the part of town board and the developer, a plan for fewer homes was approved, taking the project out of the comprehensive review process.

In Hingham, two comprehensive permit proposals are currently before town boards — one to build 42 units (including 11 affordable ones) at the end of Scotland Street on about 10 acres. Because of ground water, flood plain and wetlands issues, if a regular subdivision were to be built there it could yield as few as three houses.

Another plan proposes 16 units, including 4 affordable ones, off West Street on land zoned as official and open space. Without zoning relief, that parcel would remain undeveloped.

Residents living nearby fear additional traffic from the units will only worsen an already "terrible" traffic situation.

The developer, however, maintains the units would add little traffic to the area but expressed a willingness to hold future discussions to find ways to improve a nearby intersection.

Despite varying opinions on the issue, many agree a balance needs to be found between providing affordable housing and not over-burdening the towns in which it will be located nor abutters.

The Hingham Zoning Board of Appeals approved a comprehensive permit for a 24-unit condominium complex offering six affordable units some time ago off Whiting Street near Penniman Hill Farm.

Earlier this year, a local developer in Marshfield proposed approximately 100 houses on 80 acres of land abutting Enterprise Drive or as an option, 50 houses and a retirement community.

Under the comprehensive permit process, 800 housing units could potentially be approved for the same parcel.

A Norwell developer recently proposed a 99-unit condominium project on a 27-acre parcel of land on South Street. Although Norwell land use bylaws prohibit condominiums and apartment buildings, a developer is able to side-step those requirements by setting aside 25 percent of the units as affordable, as mandated under the comprehensive permit process.

Since then, the project has been scaled back and now includes 40 detached, single-family condominium units under the comprehensive permit process.

While many would like to see more affordable housing on the South Shore, some fear there will be negative impacts on abutters under the less stringent comprehensive review process.

Others are concerned that such development will over-tax towns' water supplies and other services and cause over-crowding in local public schools.

The Weymouth ZBA recently approved a 304-unit Washington Street luxury apartment complex, which will add to the stress already on the town's water supply, sewer resources and schools but will also fund much-needed improvements at the intersection of traffic-clogged routes 18 and 53 and provide affordable housing to Weymouth residents at the same time.

Avalon Ledges, which will be constructed on a 58-acre site behind BJ's Wholesale Club in East Weymouth, was approved under the comprehensive permit process.

The developer, Avalon Bay, will also pay $25,000 to Weymouth public schools to be used as the superintendent sees fit.

While some South Shore residents envision urban-looking "government housing projects" when they think of affordable housing, that's not the case, said Phil Hailer, spokesman for the state department of communities and development.

The comprehensive permit doesn't allow developers to force 15-story towers on towns which would adversely impact infrastructure or put public safety at peril, according to a recent interview with Hailer.

Developers are required to provide justification for why their projects cannot comply with local rules and regulations. The zoning board can issue the permit with conditions or deny it. If denied, however, the developer can appeal to the state.

Despite varying opinions on the issue, many agree a balance needs to be found between providing affordable housing and not over-burdening the towns in which it will be located nor abutters.

And even if that balance is found, South Shore communities still have a long way to go to meet the state-mandated guidelines for affordable housing.

CANDIDATES CORNER

McKenna reception

The committee to elect Mary Anne McKenna for State Rep. will host an open house at the McKenna Headquarters on Ripley Road in Cohasset, across from the post office. The reception will be from 10 a.m. to noon on Saturday, Sept. 30.

Cohasset campaign coordinator, David Farrag said, "I am proud and honored to be working with such a dynamic group of volunteers. This is an exciting campaign filled with enthusiasm, direction and real purpose. Mary Anne has a keen awareness of the district's needs and brings a dynamic perspective focused on consensus building and problem solving."

The committee would also like to announce our Hull coordinator, Gail Besse, and our Hingham coordinator, Billy Ramsey. "This campaign is reaching out to people within this district for donations of time and support. The response has been terrific," said Ramsey.

Please stop by on Saturday and enjoy some light refreshments and meet Mary Anne McKenna.

McKenna was heartened by the groundswell of support in the state primary election. McKenna, who did not have a primary opponent, topped the ticket in Hingham as well as Cohasset.

Bradley says thanks

Former Plymouth County Prosecutor and current Democratic Candidate for State Representative Garrett Bradley would like to thank all voters who participated in the Primary Election. "All the candidates discussed important issues affecting our community's future," stated Bradley.

Energized by the Primary Election, Bradley continued his door-to-door campaign the next day and looked forward to the November election. "This election is not about partisan politics," stated Bradley. "It is about discussing local issues that transcend party lines and electing the strongest advocate for our district. If elected, I will continue Representative Mary Jeanette Murray's tradition of responsive representation."

The Primary Election night also united Bradley and his former opponent Michael Holden who directed his support to the nominee. "Garrett will stand up for our community and make sure our voices are heard at the state level," said Holden. "He takes the time to listen and understand neighborhood concerns, and I know he will work hard on behalf of the residents of Hingham, Hull and Cohasset."

Bradley has spent the past year walking the district and discussing important issues with residents. As State Representative, he will work hard to deliver results on local issues such as the mall access road, better beach access for all residents, and quality of life issues that concern all residents.

Hedlund update

The Hedlund campaign continues to receive Union endorsements such as the IBPO Local 344 Police Patrolmen's Union of Hull; the IBPO Local 520 Patrolmen out of Hingham and the President of the Weymouth Patrolmen's Local, Kevin Mahoney offers his personal endorsement to the Senator and said, "The law enforcement community is truly fortunate to have such a dedicated professional fighting for them." Senator Hedlund has graciously accepted the endorsements and is most appreciative. "My commitment to the law enforcement community remains strong and has never wavered," said Hedlund.

Speaking to a room full of supporters after the primary vote, Tuesday evening, the Senator reaffirmed his dedication to his Senate district's many concerns regarding education, the environment and many other local issues. "As your Senator, I have worked with local and state leaders to enhance the quality of life here on the South Shore. We have effectively faced numerous challenges and still have many to come that could impact our standard of living and our quality of life; from the NAS Reuse plan (Mills Mall); the Greenbush restoration project; Rte. 3A bridge project; road and transportation improvements and many other issues. From my first day in office as your state senator, I have taken my obligation to the taxpayers and voters of the South Shore to be of the utmost importance. My position has not changed," said Hedlund.

For information concerning the Hedlund campaign, contact campaign headquarters at his district office located at 66 Sea St., No. Weymouth, or call 340-9866.

Unity for Cantwell

In two separate events during Unity Weekend, South Shore Democratic leaders joined together to endorse Jim Cantwell's candidacy for state senator from the Plymouth-Norfolk District.

Democrats rallied at a breakfast this past Saturday at Hajjar's, followed on Sunday by a meeting hosted by the Plymouth County Democratic League at the Rockland Sons of Italy Hall.

The unity breakfast was co-organized by Cantwell and his primary-election opponent Ted LeClair to unify Democrats from Weymouth and Braintree.

Cantwell captured nearly 60 percent of the vote on primary Tuesday, as well as LeClair's endorsement.

Cantwell said in response he was honored by the backing of LeClair and his supporters.

Other Democrats endorsing Cantwell at the Saturday breakfast were Weymouth Mayor David Madden, state Rep. Paul Haley of Weymouth, state Rep. Ron Mariano, state Rep. Joseph Sullivan, Weymouth Town Council President Paul Leary, and Town Councilors Jack Carey and Greg Hargadon. Town Councilor Joseph Connolly and former Weymouth selectman Sue Kay were among other area Democrats who endorsed Cantwell prior to the primary.

"Jim is a man of tremendous integrity, a man of honor," Haley, chairman of the powerful House ways and means committee, said. "He has distinguished himself as an assistant district attorney, and he's shown courage in that job. He's also demonstrated commitment. He has worked as a public servant in a host of different areas. He has really devoted his young adult life to public service."

At the Plymouth County Democratic League Event, Cantwell announced he had received the endorsements of Congressmen Joseph Moakley and William Delahunt.

Andi Shaughnessy. The senior captain for the 6-0 field hockey team scored all but one of the Lady Skippers' goals this week, leading the way past Carver on Wednesday, 3-2, and Hingham on Thursday, 3-0. This gives her a team high 10 tallies at the one third point of the season.

Lady Skippers picking up steam

Field hockey team stays perfect

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

"It's about time Cohasset came out on top," effused field hockey varsity head coach Debbie Bostwick, of her 6-0 squad.

Cohasset has rolled through the first third of the season, outplaying every team that opposes them.

"Being 6-0 is an unbelievable accomplishment." Bostwick continued. "The girls are playing from the heart."

Most recently, Hingham was overwhelmed by Cohasset's superior offense, losing 3-0.

"Being 6-0 is an unbelievable accomplishment. The girls are playing from the heart."
Cohasset field hockey coach Debbie Bostwick

Senior captain Andi Shaughnessy, the Lady Skippers' top scorer this year, logged her ninth and tenth goals of the year, while seniors Maggie O'Connor and Kelly Lordan scored for Cohasset. Sophomore Heather Peraino had two assists, while senior captain defenseman Sarah Kidder had one.

Hingham managed just one shot on net, as Cohasset kept the ball in their offensive end for the almost the entire game. Though Cohasset had a season high 59 penalties, their control of the ball kept Hingham from seizing any scoring chances.

Previous to that, Shaughnessy had her first hat trick of the season in a 3-2 victory over Carver. Kidder and Peraino both recorded assists.

At 1-1, this game was the only one this season in whiche Cohasset was not ahead at halftime.

The Lady Skippers team is focused around defense, with a tremendous amount of speed in seniors Morgan Hurley, Karen McMorris, Ashley Ulmer, and tricaptain Sarah Kidder.

Senior goalie Krysten Considine has recorded four shutouts through the six games, allowing only three goals.

"The defense is working," Bostwick said. "We want to take Cohasset's name and make the whole town proud."

Not to be outdone, Cohasset's offensive players have created many scoring opportunities, not only for themselves, but for their teammates.

"I don't need to score this goal. Here, I'll set you up. . . ." remarked Bostwick, quoting her unselfish forwards.

With all these positives in the past few weeks, it would be quite easy for the players to become too

Soccer team finds winning formula

By Lou Molinari
CORRESPONDENT

Ursuline Academy was scheduled to play the Cohasset High School girls soccer team this week. Ursuline Academy lost to Norwell High's girls soccer team last week.

Ursuline Academy gave the Scituate High girls soccer team a good beating the week before.

What's the story on this all-girls school in Dedham and how did it become so involved with schools from this area?

There's a bit of irony that goes along with the non-league game that many of the area teams find themselves playing.

According to reports, the person that brought Ursuline to the area is George Capozzi of Scituate.

He was also the girls soccer coach at Ursuline. He needed games to fill out the schedule. So he approached many of the area teams.

Capozzi left Ursuline in August for one reason or another, and now the area teams find themselves playing a school and coach they don't know.

That's today's trivia. It's not much, I'll admit, but see if you can find it someplace else.

As for the Cohasset High girls soccer team, last week was a great week for the team, according to their coach Deb Beal: "We tied a game and won a game, and most of all, it was the week we scored our first goal."

The Lady Skippers entered this week with a 1-3-1 record and appear ready to add to the "W" column.

"The kids got the taste of scoring and winning last week, and they're working very hard to keep both scoring and winning going. That's all it took to get this team going. I knew once we got that first goal that's all it would take."

Scoring that all-important first goal for Cohasset was Becky Ross. The goal gave Cohasset a 1-1 tie with Carver.

As it turned out, that goal opened a floodgate of goals. A 6-0 victory over Hull followed Ross's goal.

Maggie O'Neil led the rush of goals scoring three against Hull, while Ross, Molly Flanagan and Catherine Flaherty had the other three.

And while all this scoring was going on, goalie Kelly Holway was keeping her net area nice and tidy.

Holway has been doing an outstanding job, even with an injured shoulder.

"Kelly's play has been an inspiration to the kids," said coach Beal. She wants to play, and she's obviously doing a fine job.

"The kids now have the taste and that's what counts. This was the week that brought us together."

Besides playing Ursuline this week, Cohasset also has a game scheduled with Abington High, a very tough competitor. The game is scheduled for Thursday at Cohasset.

Forget the pro scene

EXTRA POINTS

MIKE SPELLMAN

Man, these sure are lousy times on the New England sports scene, at least insofar as our professional sports franchises are concerned.

We have three teams—the Celtics, Red Sox and Patriots—that have overspent on mediocre talent, severely compromising their ability to pull off a quick fix anytime soon. The situation with "our" fourth local team, the Bruins, is diametrically opposite, but equally disheartening: they have decent talent and gobs of money (at least by NHL standards), but would rather relinquish the former than the latter.

The bottom line is we'll be lucky if any one of these four teams even make the playoffs in the next two to three years.

This sad state of affairs is already driving scores of diehards nuts, and even some away.

The question then is what are we incurable sports junkies supposed to do?!?

Well, the answer might be closer at hand than you think. . . in fact, it could be right down the street.

Your local high school teams would love your support. They would eat it up and re-double their efforts in order to keep it coming. They would certainly not regard it as a necessary evil, as so many of today's professional athletes do.

What you, the sports consumer, would surrender in precision and athleticism taking in a high school sporting event, you'd more than make up for in the upgraded areas of enthusiasm, team spirit and true love of the sport. And you'd save a small fortunate to boot.

You want more, you say?. . . You've got more!

So you like great individual performers, eh? Well, we've got the state's 1999 girls' soccer scoring champ, Liz Lima, back for her senior season at Rockland High. We've also got Jarred Anderson, who was himself lighting things up on local soccer fields last fall for Norwell with 11 points through three games when he went down for the season with a knee injury, bouncing back big with nine goals to help pace the five time defending South Shore league Champion Clippers to a 6-0 start.

For my fellow pigskin devotees who have been letdown big time by the 0-4 Pats, and in particular by their lack of scoring punch, let me suggest a couple of players

Skippers continue to roll

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

For the first time since 1983, the Cohasset football Skippers have opened their season with three straight wins, having smothered the Crusaders of Cape Cod Tech at home Friday night, 13-3.

Cohasset began the game on defense, with sophomores Cosimo Cambi and Ben Lynner each sacking the Crusader quarterback within the first three plays.

"The defense is eleven guys playing together. If (linebacker) Ronan (Buick) makes a great play, it's because of the three other guys that make him open."
Cohasset defensive coordinator Bob Sylvia

That set the tone for the rest of the game, as Cohasset's version of the Steel Curtain did not allow an offensive touchdown for the second straight week.

After the Crusaders wisely punted away from Cohasset's outstanding returner, junior Nick Bolster, the Skippers drove 68 yards down the field, culminating with a nine-yard touchdown run by senior captain Brian Krupczak.

Krupczak collected his second touchdown in the fourth quarter for his second multi-touchdown game of the season, while rushing for 148 yards on 30 carries.

"Krupczak was spectacular," reported head coach Tony Rolfe. "He really finished off his runs well, and he's getting better and better."

Bolster was only kicked to once, and though he capitalized on that opportunity with a 70 yard touchdown return, it was nullified by a Cohasset penalty.

Bolster did establish himself as one of the primary offensive threats for the second consecutive game, winding up on the receiving end of all six of the Skippers completed passes. Catching every toss thrown in his direction, Bolster eluded defenders virtually at will against a Cape Cod squad, whose main intent was to shut down Krupczak and the Skippers' blossoming ground attack.

"We just kept throwing him the ball," reported Rolfe. "We could complete that [pass] almost every time."

Junior quarterback Jason Brown completed six of his seven passes, and through three games has not thrown one interception.

"Jason has gotten better," asserted Rolfe.

As for his avoidance of turnovers, Rolfe confided "I told him that you don't leave the ball up for grabs."

Junior fullback Paul Previte had only two carries on the night, but both picked up crucial first downs to sustain drives in the second and Carver at Cohasset- Friday, 7 p.m.

The surging Skippers, 3-0 after last week's win, face their biggest test of the season Friday, beginning league play against the team many regard as the favorites in the South Shore League, Carver. The Crusaders are 2-0 after last week's 28-20 win over Bishop Stang.

A late game fumble is all that prevented Carver from representing the SSL in last year's Super Bowl rather than Norwell, and they're loaded for bear this season with 10 returning starters, including talented runners J.T Aikens (5-10,170) and Chris Villanueva (6-1,220), and Division 1 collegiate prospect Jason Kingston (6-1, 225) at tight end and linebacker.

The only scare of the evening for Cohasset occurred midway though the third quarter, with the Skippers ahead 6-0. The Crusader offense made it into the Red Zone for the only time of the night after a 25 yard run by Cape Cod running back Mike Slipca. Facing a first and goal from the six yard line, the Skipper defense held their ground, stuffing three consecutive running attempts, thus forcing the Crusaders to settle for a field goal.

"The defense played when they had to play," commented defensive coordinator Bob Sylvia. "They came up and did what they had to do."

Top performers on defense were Lynner, Cambi, senior linebacker Ronan Buick, sophomore Chris McKenna, senior captain Craig Davis and junior cornerback Liam Martin. However, Sylvia considered the win to be the result of a total team effort.

"The defense is eleven guys playing together," Sylvia offered. "If Ronan makes a great play, it's because of the three other guys that make him open."

With another home game coming up this Friday against Carver, the Skippers could continue on the winning track, en route to their first full season on the plus side of .500 under Rolfe. But Rolfe refuses to take anything for granted, knowing that everything has to be earned in order to be a successful squad.

"We were glad to get the win," stated Rolfe. "But it only means we are at least going to be 3-7 this year."

The one dark note of the evening occurred in the third quarter, when Crusader Zach Belli went down with a neck injury, and an ambulance had to be called.

Game Notes

-Cohasset sacked the quarterback three times, with two more hurries that forced incomplete passes.

-Cohasset converted its first extra point of the season in the fourth quarter after a Krupczak touchdown.

-Cohasset is now second behind rival Hull in division four with 442 total offensive yards.

-Cambi led the team with 10 tackles. Davis was second with six.

-Between both teams, eight punts were kicked, seven were downed, and the one that was returned did not count due to a penalty.

-Cohasset was two for two on fourth down conversions, while Cape Cod Tech was one for three.

-Krupczak's totals for yards and carries were a season high.

-Cape Cod Tech did not complete one pass the entire game.

-After putting up 20 points in the season opener against Sekonk, Cape Cod's Chris LaFrance's field goal represented the only points the Crusaders have scored in the last two weeks.

you might seek out for your fix of offensive explosiveness: returning Globe All-Scholastic tailback Bob Murphy, Norwell halfback Mike Mohan (430 yards through his first two games), Cohasset speedster Brian Krupczak (375 yards on the ground in three games).

Then there is my personal favorite so far this season: Scituate's three pronged backfield attack of quarterback Bryan Butterworth, fullback Brian Swider and halfback David Butterworth— a consummate speed guy, consummate power back and a classic combo of both styles, respectively. Friday night's showdown with defending league champion Rockland should bring out the best in this trio, along with the rest of the upset minded Sailors.

If it's a winner you hunger for, might I propose you check out the goings on in Marshfield, Norwell and Rockland. Super Bowl participants in each of the last two years. Actually the streak is three years running for Norwell and four-of-five for Marshfield.

The Rams making it five-for-six is regarded as little more than a formality at this point, as many consider them to be the top team in Eastern Massachusetts this year, after having outscored their three opponents to date by a combined score of 122-6, including a 33-0 shellacking of Rockland last Friday.

Of course, if pulling for an underdog is more your preference, let me introduce you to the football programs at Cohasset and Scituate high schools, both currently unbeaten. The Skippers and Sailors have been slapped around by teams like Norwell, Rockland and Marshfield for years now, but are showing signs early on that they may be ready for make a run at the prime time.

Actually, if cheering for the little guy is really your thing, you might want to consider arranging your schedule around those of the teams at teeny Cohasset High, whose four varsity fall programs—football, field hockey and boys' and girls' soccer—stood at a combined 13-5-1 through the end of last week. CHS is by far the smallest school in the South Shore League, with a student body of under 300, nearly 120 fewer than at second smallest Hull. Amazingly, the Skippers have in recent years been able to consistently compete in the SSL and even thrive on occasion, as has been the case this fall. Clearly, much of this success has to do with the great interscholastic athletic program that was established at the Cohasset Middle School four years ago under the direction of Athletic Director Clark Chatterton, who succumbed to his battle with cancer this Summer.

This is where the story of Cohasset High sports takes on an added powerful human interest attraction. The first group of eighth graders who competed in interscholastic competition are now seniors at CHS. They have all dedicated their seasons to the memory of Chatterton. The field hockey team, with 11 seniors, had particularly strong ties to Clark.

"Clark told these girls four years ago that they would do great things as seniors, and he kept telling them over the years that this would be their year," recalled field hockey coach Debbie Bostwick, who has directed the Lady Skippers to a 6-0 start. "He really took a strong interest in them. It's a shame he couldn't be here to see how his prediction turned out."

These are just a few of the compelling stories playing out on area fields of competition this fall. Please believe me, there are many more. Why don't you try to find a few of your own. And, if you're successful, please let me know about it. After all, it's not like I'm going to be spending much time watching the Patriots, Celtics or Bruins.

Halloran and Bitetti return to pace Clippers

There's a statistic from last November's Division 2 girls All-State cross country meet that illustrates the dominance of Norwell High's Kayla Halloran and Sara Bitetti.

THE EXTRA MILE

WITH JOE REARDON

Halloran and Bitetti were the only two teammates harriers from the same team to finish in the top 15 on the Northfield Mountain Ski Area course. Halloran raced to a third-place finish and Bitetti, a strong hill runner, moved hard at the end to clinch 15th. Only one other team — Amherst Regional in Division 1 – pulled off the same impressive feat as their top-two runners finished 10th and 12th, respectively.

The performances the two juniors turned in at the All-State championships weren't the exception, but rather the norm, last season. The duo swept through their dual-meet schedule with 1-2 finishes in six of seven races. The one exception came against Hingham when Allison Donovan finished second behind the undefeated Halloran and just in front of Bitetti.

Norwell High coach Chuck Martin expects more of the same this year from his fleet-footed harriers as the Lady Clippers look to win their fourth consecutive SSL championship. If Halloran and Bitetti can repeat their performances of a year ago, the rest of the SSL is going to be in for some tough racing against the deep Norwell team.

"I dual meets, it's hard to lose when you go 1-2," said Martin. "The other team has to really pack them in."

Halloran and Bitetti are both fierce competitors and complement each other well in certain workouts. Halloran, a sub-5: 10 miler, has more natural speed than Bitetti. Bitetti, though, thrives on tough, hilly courses. Both runners appreciate the other's talents.

"Kayla usually does better than me in the sprint workouts so that helps me a lot," said Bitetti. "We're usually together at the start (of a race) and I try to stay with her as long as I can. I'd definitely say Kayla's the best runner in the league and our team is definitely the strongest."

"I usually run with her at the beginning of the race for about a mile," Halloran said. "She's really great to run with because she encourages me, even during races."

Martin said the girls have different mentalities when it comes to racing and they suit the duo well.

"Kayla likes to run up front," Martin said. "Kayla's a fierce competitor who'll battle you right to the wire. Sara likes to work her way up and is strong on the hills."

When the Lady Clippers run their exhausting hill workouts on the steep inclines at World's End in Hingham, it's Bitetti who's in her element pushing Halloran. Bitetti leads the way up the hill with Halloran either on her shoulder or a few strides back. Heading down the other side, Halloran's long stride allows her to catch up with Bitetti.

The one goal they have in common is to break Norwell's course record. Halloran is currently tied with former Clipper harrier Lisa Sammartino at No. 1 on the all-time list with her 17:10 for the 2.8 miles. Bitetti is holding down the No. 5 spot at 17:34. Halloran also wants to break the 18:30 mark on Franklin Park's 3.1-mile layout. She just missed her sub-18: 30 last fall when she finished third in the Class D meet in 18:33.

Their invitational meet performances only improved, especially Bitetti, a classic late-season bloomer.

"Sara improves with every meet," Martin said. "Every week she gets stronger. It's like money in the bank. I can almost guarantee she'll be running stronger at the end of the season."

They swept the top-two places at the SSL meet with Halloran edging Bitetti over the final half mile after Bitetti led much of the way. In the South Shore Principals meet, Bitetti finished a strong third behind Halloran and Justine Whipple of Duxbury. The pair went on to finish third and fifth, respectively, at the Class D championships at Franklin Park, setting up their stellar race at Northfield.

Chances are better than average that the entire Norwell High team will be lining up behind the starting line at this year's All-State meet on the grounds of the Tufts Medical School in the central Massachusetts town of Grafton. The likelihood of a Halloran, Bitetti finish up front is just has high.

Kingston's John Noland and Holly Madden of Scituate continued their winning ways in the local races. Noland turned the Marshfield 20K into a one-man show by averaging 5:43 pace and crossing the line in 1 hours, 10 minutes, 33 seconds. Madden finished eighth overall at the SIDS 10K in Hingham with a time of 38:00 to take the women's division. John Saville of Brockton was the overall winner in 35:40…The SIDS race had a number of locals placing in their respective age categories. Hingham's Katherine Merra was the first master with a time of 39:44 and Amy Matthews, also of Hingham, was victorious in the 20-29 division with her 47:05. Cohasset's Bob Morgan placed first in the 16-19 group with a time of 44:45. Scituate's Jamie Blanks was fifth overall (37:28), which was good for third in the 30-39 division just 22 seconds behind second-place finisher Mark Hecor of Hingham. Hecor crossed the finish line in 37:06. Jake Mahoney of Scituate surged to a second-place finish in the 50-59 division with a 40:07. Cohasset's Barbara Buckley ran well for third in the 30-39 division in 40:24, breaking into the top 20 with her 19th-place finish. Amy Matthews found her hometown race to her liking, winning the 20-29 division with a 47:05. Pembroke's Richard Boynton averaged 8:01 miles to place second in the 60-and-over division in 49:41 and Elizabeth Elderedge of Hingham was third in the master's division in 49:38. Pembroke's Amy Hollstein and Solandge Connolly of Hanover finished 1-2 in the 15-and-under division in 57:09 and 57:23, respectively…Hingham's Tim Tobin was fourth in the 60-69 division of the popular Wrentham 5K Crackerbarrel race in 20:36.

sure of themselves, and assume they will be able to simply cruise into the post-season. But with the multitude of veterans, 11 seniors and five juniors, that does not appear to be the case.

"I still keep [a disciplined] practice," reported Bostwick, who holds a 20 minute run and wind sprints at the beginning of every practice.

However, that's not to say the players cannot enjoy the success they are having. Many practices include Field Hockey Baseball, a favorite among the players.

"You have to have fun,"stated the coach. "If not, you shouldn't even be here."

This season has been dedicated to Clark Chatterton, the much beloved athletic director of Cohasset High School. His untimely death over the summer gave the field hockey team a determination to have a great year.

"They are playing from the heart," said Bostwick. "They just wish he was around to see it."

Wearing black arm bands for all their games to honor Chatterton, the Lady Skippers have driven themselves toward the playoffs. Cohasset has 12 points right now, and needs only to win three of their final 11 games to clinch a spot in the state tournament.

But simply making the playoffs seems not to be the main objective, especially after being ousted in the first round last year. Cohasset hopes to advance this year, a goal which would appear all the more attainable with a high seed going into the tournament.

Chatterton not only influenced the now-upperclassmen, but the entire town. Because of him, there were 80 players who tried out for teams from the Middle School all the way up to varsity, as opposed to under 50 when the program first started.

Maybe it is about time Cohasset came out on top.

Has your son or daughter been bullied?

SCHOOL'S IN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

The Cohasset PSO is sponsoring an important evening for parents and teachers — "Bullying and Teasing: What Every Parent Needs to Know."

Has your son or daughter ever been bullied? Does your child pick on other children? Are you confused about how to handle bullying and teasing problems? Please join the PSO on Tuesday, Oct. 3 at 7:30 p.m. at the Joseph Osgood School lunchroom to hear and take part in an informational workshop for parents and teachers that will provide you with important facts you need to know about bullying.

Nancy Mullin-Rindler, director of the project on Teasing and Bullying at Wellesley College, will present practical suggestions on how to effectively respond to teasing and bullying and how to "bully proof" your child. The discussion will primarily be focused on those children in grades K-6, although the issues and problem-solving recommendations are applicable for middle school children as well. The evening will consist of a presentation and a Q & A session. Coffee, beverages and desserts will be served. Valuable information and background research will be available to attendees. The workshop is sponsored by the Cohasset PSO and is free to all that attend.

The Middle School is holding its "Back to School night" on Thursday, Sept. 28 at 7 p.m. The evening will begin with an introduction by new Middle/High School principal Dr. Michael Jones. Following his remarks, parents are invited to follow their children's daily schedule and meet the teachers.

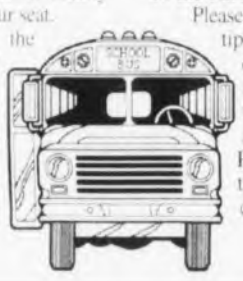
Refreshments will be served at the end of the evening.

If you have school news to share with this column, please contact Jennifer Piepenbrink, at jenpiep@yahoo.com or by mail to 622CJC Hwy.

School bus safety tips

Tips courtesy of the AAA traffic Safety Department and Safety Officer Rick Yocum. Tips are also available at the Cohasset Police Department website: www.cohassetpd.org.

1. Leave home early enough to arrive at your bus stop.
2. Wait for your bus in a safe place-well away from the road.
3. Enter the bus in an orderly manner and take your seat.
4. Follow all the instructions of your school bus driver.
5. Stay in your seat while the bus is moving.
6. Keep your arms and head in the bus at all times.
7. Keep the aisles clear of books, knapsacks.
8. Please be quiet and orderly.
9. Be courteous to your school bus driver and fellow students.
10. Be alert to traffic when leaving the bus.
11. Walk to your bus stop-avoid asking your parents to drive you there.



To the Parents

Please discuss the safety tips with your children. Your children should understand that riding the bus is a privilege. Permission to continue can be withdrawn.

Integrating art across the curriculum

Exhibit part of Osgood project

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

"Hands of the Ancestors," an exhibit at the South Shore Art Center, could hand down more to future generations than anyone expected.

Three teachers at the Osgood School — who are enrolled in a special master's degree program at Lesley College — are involved in developing a curriculum integrating arts into the science and social studies curriculum at the second-grade level

The exhibit of Algonquian art provided the perfect palette for their project because the state mandates through its curriculum guidelines under education reform that second-graders study indigenous peoples.

"What a source, we're right here in the community," said teacher Rose Collins, who will write the curriculum along with Barbara Wells and Lauren Cook.

Monday all five second-grade classes at Osgood took turns visiting the art center for some interactive activity with guest artists, John Bear Mitchell of Indian Island, Maine who told stories and played his handmade drums and David Sanipass of Portland, Maine who played the song-flute and told legends of his grandfather.

"This is wonderful. In this day and age, we don't have enough of this."
— David Sanipass, artist

Heather Collins, outreach coordinator at the art center, worked with the teachers to involve the children with the exhibit. She visited all the second-grade classrooms last week and shared the book "Clambake" with the pupils to set the stage for their trip to the art center.

"It is the story of a Wampanoag boy who puts on a clambake for his tribe," Heather Collins said. "But it also shows that he goes to intermediate school and has soccer trophies and a computer in his room."

After the book, the pupils also designed and made pendants with toothpicks representing porcupine quills that most proudly wore around their necks Monday.

"Doing something with their hands gives them the sense of participating in the (Wampanoag) tradition," Heather Collins said.

After the art center visit, the children will reflect on their experiences through writing.

"The exhibit is perfect timing for us to start the integration of art into the curriculum by getting an authentic presentation," said Rose Collins. The teachers' project will involve lesson plans that they hope to share eventually with other school districts.

Sanipass said he enjoys interacting with children.

"This is wonderful," he said. "In this day and age, we don't have enough of this."

Sanipass said children today are too plugged into the Internet and technology.

"Our ancestry taught us to teach our kids by our own hands," he said about his Micmac roots. "Today, we leave it up to technology to teach our kids, the way I was taught was hands on."

He said interweaving art into the curriculum is a natural for children.

"All the kids I've ever met are artists —I don't care who they say they are."

Hands of the Ancestors, An Assembly of Algonquian Artists continues at the art center through Nov. 12. Opening reception is from 6-8 p.m. Sept. 30. For more information, call the center at 383-ARTS.

Greenbush-related articles spice up warrant

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

The local issue always reliable for stirring up a good debate – restoration of the Greenbush commuter rail line – will make a couple of appearances at the Oct. 23 special Town Meeting.

Articles 19 and 20 will open up the proverbial can of worms known as Greenbush at the meeting, and ask the town to approve rezoning the Old Colony Railroad right of way, and set aside $15,000 for a mitigation assistance fund.

Both articles, according to selectmen, are designed to give the town some additional leverage in dealing with the mitigation process.

Last Tuesday, in a meeting with representatives from all the Greenbush towns, Governor Paul Cellucci restated his support for restoration, saying the train will happen, but not without the proper mitigation. Cellucci also ordered Transportation Secretary Kevin Sullivan and Department of Environmental Protection Secretary Robert Durand to work directly with the affected towns in mitigating their needs.

However, with that assurance, Cohasset selectmen are still nervous that the town will not be protected enough once the train comes a-rolling down the tracks.

"There's going to be $23 million in mitigation divided among four towns [Weymouth, Braintree, Cohasset and Scituate]," Callahan said. "Hingham alone got $40 million. They're going to box the other four towns into $23 million."

"Hingham alone got $40 million. They're going to box the other four towns into $23 million."
— Selectmen Chairman Thomas Callahan

Selectman Michael Sullivan, who attended the meeting with Callahan, said since it appears the train will happen, it's now the selectmen's job to secure proper environmental, sound and vibration mitigation. "We need to make sure we are protected and I don't believe we are."

The idea was raised at the board's meeting Monday night that the town should set up a fund to pay for any legal or engineering help once mitigation discussions begin. The board voted unanimously to ask Town Meeting for $15,000 to set up the fund.

Callahan also gave his support for Article 19 that would designate the town's right of way a "public park." The designation would require a two-thirds majority vote in the state Legislature to approve the MBTA land taking. Selectmen think this maneuver would provide the town with enough leverage in its mitigation negotiations to ensure the town receives its fair share. However, a similar article was voted down at a prior town meeting when the move was viewed as "obstructionist."

Sullivan said this time the town must carefully explain the purpose behind the article; that it isn't obstructionist, rather strategical. "We have to be very thorough in our explanation," he said.

Selectman Ronnie McMorris said last time the move seemed to be "disingenuous." She also questioned if the property already wasn't classified as open space. She said on town assessors maps, the right of way is already labeled as open space. However Callahan said no record of an official vote turning the right of way into open space could be found, and he wants to cover all the bases.

Town Meeting could tie up loose ends

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

With any luck, this fall's special Town Meeting on Oct. 23 will tie up loose ends to a wide range of town issues. Whether those are general housekeeping items, such as paying off old bills, capital purchases such as a new ambulance, or old nagging issues such as the Hagerty Property or Woodside Cemetery, all bases will be touched.

After seven years of haggling, funding for renovation of the Hagerty property will be voted upon (see related story), and after more than a decade of dealing with the town's cemetery crunch, funding for Woodside Cemetery expansion could come to life.

Cemetery committee chairman Glenn Pratt gave selectmen the news that all permits had been approved, at their Sept. 12 meeting. "We have all the permits and are ready to move forward," he said.

Two articles will address the cemetery issue. One will provide $50,000 for the cemetery's final landscape architecture plans to be drawn up. The other give the town permission to pay for the project, which is expected to cost close to $600,000, over 10 years.

According to Pratt, the expanded cemetery will add room for 700 graves and columbarium walls holding up to 1,000 urns. The cost to reserve space in the cemetery is expected to offset the cost of the project's debt service.

One of the biggest holdups of the project was concern from the Zoning Board of Appeals over the expansion's density – that it would take on too much of an "urban" look.

Aside from appropriate spacing of plots, a Gold Star Mother memorial park will be constructed as a "focal point."

"It will be at the entrance of the new area so that your eye goes to the memorial," as opposed to the rows of gravesites, said Pratt.

The push for a new cemetery has been a long-standing issue in town. Just 300 sites are left in the Beechwood Cemetery, said Pratt. The majority of time has been spent just looking for a space. In the end, a two-acre plot adjacent to Woodside was the best location. "It's been on the table for a long time. Let's get it done and move on," Pratt said.

Also on the warrant are a number of basic housekeeping items, such as $17,111 to pay some bills, transfer of $30,000 from the town's insurance fund to replace the bus that was damaged in an accident last winter, and $319,350 for various town budget adjustments. The town is also looking for funds to purchase a new ambulance, police cruiser, one-ton dump truck, riding lawn mower and street sweeper, as well as fund private way road improvements, computer system improvements, and to drill wells for Woodside Cemetery, Milliken Field and Alumni Field.

The Government Island Study Committee could get a new look if an article passes authorizing its renaming to the Government Island Advisory Committee, and adopts a new charter for the group.

The lone citizen petition asks the town to waive all permit fees paid by St. Stephen's Episcopal Church during its recent renovation project. A total of $3,025 would be returned to the church.

One late addition to the warrant was an article for $15,000 to fund an engineering study of the gravel pits area off North Main street. With work completed in the town's sewer installation project, the pits will be vacated. A committee was formed by selectmen last week for the purpose of discussing the future of the pits.

The Town Meeting will be held Oct. 23 at 7 p.m. at the Middle/High School auditorium.

Sewer commission questioned about betterment interest rate

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Responding to confusion expressed by a town resident, selectmen questioned two of the town's three sewer commissioners about the 1 percent interest rate attached to the town's sewer betterment charges.

The concern arose after residents received their first sewer betterment bill in September. Residents have until Oct. 16 to decide whether to pay the cost in one lump sum, or divide the payments up over a 20-year period, like a loan. Though Article 37 at this past spring's Town Meeting required the sewer commission to set an interest rate of "not more than 2 percent," some thought the implication given at the time, was that the rate would actually be zero percent.

"It was my understanding there wasn't going to be an interest rate," selectman Michael Sullivan said to sewer commissioners Ray Kasperowicz and Henry Rattenbury. "The impression given was a zero percent interest rate."

According to Town Manager Mark Haddad, state law requires a 5 percent interest rate to be charged in betterment projects, unless a Town Meeting vote sets the rate otherwise. Haddad said the debate at Town Meeting reasoned since the town was borrowing the money at a zero percent interest rate, the rate passed along to town residents should be zero percent also. Haddad and the town's financial director Michael Buckley endorsed the zero percent interest rate.

However, according to Kasperowicz, due to a couple of concerns, the commission felt it in the best interest of the town to charge the minimal 1 percent rate – which is allowed by the Town Meeting vote.

He said the commission worried that a large number of residents would seek payment deferrals or abatements, similar to what occurs with the town's real estate assessment taxes. Because the town is locked in to pay a certain amount of debt service a year, if the money collected in betterment payments can't cover the town's loan payment, the money will have to be made up from the general fund. "We don't want to put the town in that position," he said.

This year, the town has to come up with $404,000 in debt service, according to Haddad.

"I think it makes sense," said Kasperowicz about the 1 percent interest rate charge.

Though the commissioners are unable to change the rate, even if they wanted to, Sullivan was still unhappy it was done in the first place. "Why would you go against Town Meeting, and Haddad and Buckley?" he questioned. "Unless there was strong justification to change it, [it should have stayed at zero percent]."

The average betterment charge in Cohasset was $13,000, and residents would pay back $650 a year over 20 years if they choose to defer full payment. The 1 percent interest rate will calculated against the balance of the betterment.

Hagerty property funding makes it to special Town Meeting

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Selectmen chairman Thomas Callahan said it best when he said "Finally!"

He was referring to the news that after seven years of debating, planning, permitting and designing, funding for the renovation of the Hagerty property will be debated on the floor of a Town Meeting.

Article 16 on the Oct. 23 special Town Meeting warrant will ask the town to approve $150,000 for "improvements to the Hagerty Property on Parker Avenue for the purposes of recreation, boating and conservation as voted by the town under Article 26 of the [March, 1993 Town Meeting] when the land was acquired by the town."

According to Russ Bonetti, chairman of the Hagerty Property Committee and a Parker Avenue resident, the money will be used to turn the two-acre former home of Cohasset Colonial Furniture Co., into a public dock and parking lot. Among the things to be done are the removal of the concrete slab located next to the Hagerty house and office, raise the rest of the parking lot 18 inches, pave, remove three septic tanks from the site, construct a walkway across the marsh near the property's boathouse up to Government Island, and build a dock with temporary mooring space. The parking lot will create 27 spaces.

Town engineer John Modelewski had estimated the total cost of the project at $130,000, not including any overruns the project may experience. The Hagerty committee recommended at a recent meeting to request $150,000 from Town Meeting and cover any additional overruns through its own $50,000 budget. "I'd like to see it done by Memorial Day next year," said Bonetti.

"No one can say there hasn't been a real effort to put this out for as many comments as possible."
— Russ Bonetti, Hagerty committee chairman

He said the lion's share of the project's cost stems from the walkway to Government Island, the floats and dock and the parking lot fill. Bonetti would love to see a community project day and have town residents help construct the walkway, similar to how the town built the playground at the old Osgood School. "I'd like to explore if we can get someone to set the posts in the marsh and do a party down there to put the decking down and finish it and save a few bucks," he said. "Anything they don't spend is money [the town] doesn't get taxed for."

The debate over the property began seven years ago when the town purchased the land from Mary Hagerty. Bonetti said there used to be six rusted buildings on the property, some where the marsh is now. In fact, he said, the equipment used to be stored on palettes to prevent damage during high flood tides. An anonymous donor gave the town $50,000 to purchase and renovate the property, which was matched by a grant from the Cohasset Land Trust. After the buildings were torn down, and the marsh allowed to recover, the Hagerty Committee's focus turned to it use. Eventually a number of public hearings narrowed down the desired use of the property. The permitting process required from the Army Corps of Engineers is what dragged the process out. But now with permits in hand, work is ready to begin.

"We've had a lot of input over seven years," he said about the process. "We've had three or four public meetings where we went out and advertised the meetings...No one can say there hasn't been a real effort to put this out for as many comments as possible."

Once construction begins, Bonetti would like to look into renaming the land from the well-known "Hagerty Property" name. He said he would like to see it renamed as a memorial for someone from the community such as Clark Chatterton or Mary Fleming.

The special fall Town Meeting will be held Oct. 23 at 7 p.m. at the Middle/High School auditorium.

CRC encouraged after meeting with fed., state agencies already have input in the early stages," Rizzo explained. "That way the permitting should go a lot smoother."

But the project still has a lot further to go before the permit process happens. Rizzo hopes to hold a public hearing similar to the one the CRC held two weeks ago to discuss Cohasset Village renovations, sometime in October, in order to even see if there is any interest in building a harbor walk.

Some of the agencies had concerns regarding the environmental impact and structural integrity of the plan.

According to Rizzo, he was told the project should refrain from being propped up over the water, and should instead stay on land. "It would be much better from their standpoint to stay as much as possible on the existing sidewalks that are there and whatever other land there is," he said. "They recommended staying away as much as possible from cantilevering or extending out into the harbor with some sort of boardwalk."

Rizzo said, because of parking and traffic flow concerns along the water, part of the harbor walk might have to jut out a foot or two over the water – something that would be done to create the least amount of shading as possible. The agencies also warned against aggressively changing any of the existing pedestrian bridges, particularly the Border Street Bridge.

"Because that area has such a unique tidal current [water flows in and out of the Gulf depending on the tide]...they were concerned about constructing any type of bridge possible of damaging any ecological aspects [of the Gulf] and adding any structural supports that may change the tidal or water flow in the area," said Rizzo.

Concern was expressed also over the structural integrity of the existing sea wall, and whether it could stand anything being built on top of it. "It's fine now, but anything on top of it could cause a problem," Rizzo explained.

Overall, Rizzo said the agencies were "enthusiastic" about the project, particularly because of its community-oriented purpose. "It really would help with public access and make it easier to walk around and view the harbor and enjoy the environment," said Rizzo. "They wish they could work on more projects like that rather than deal with more contentious issues with developers...It's something that would enhance the area and aksed us to keep them in the loop."

New Town Planner Elizabeth Harrington said the meeting was "very productive."

"It gave us some very good technical insight as to what could work and what couldn't in terms of permitting," she said.

Police to conduct citizen's academy cover services such as bike patrols and marine patrols. Although there is no additional money for a Citizens Police Academy this year, Noonan said the department decided to make it a priority and stretch the grant monies to cover it.

The class size at the academy is limited to 12 people, age 16 and older.

Noonan said police hope to get a cross-section of teenagers, parents and senior citizens.

"We hope participants will see what we really do, how people are treated and how we do our job," he said.

Noonan acknowledged that there is a communication gap among police, some teenagers in town and their parents. Some teens and their parents criticized the way police handled arrests of minors at underage drinking parties this past summer.

He also said in a small town, rumors can quickly circulate.

"Cocktail parties are our worst enemy," Noonan said. "It seems like everyone believes what they hear and no one goes to the source to really find out."

At a recent meeting, the Drug and Alcohol Committee also bemoaned the fact that some local parents talk about police in a negative way in front of their children.

The academy is a two-way educational process, Noonan said. While citizens learn more about the police and why officers make the decisions they do, police gain a better understanding of the views and concerns of the community, he said.

Mystery night at Buttonwood

Buttonwood Books & Toys will hold its fall Mystery Night on Wednesday, Oct. 4 from 7-9 pm at the Cohasset store, featuring mystery authors Barbara Neely, Gary Braver and Jamie Katz.

Neely's new mystery, "Blanche Passes Go," is her fourth novel to feature Blanche White, a woman with a strong wit and a feisty style who has to integrate issues of friendship and love against a backdrop of racism and homicide. "Elixir," a biotech thriller written by Gary Braver centers around Chris Bacon, a biologist who faces moral and ethical questions with his new miracle drug that threatens his marriage and his life. Jamie Katz returns with his second mystery, "A Summer For Dying," in which a brilliant real estate venture by a client draws attorneys Dan Kardon and his ladylove, Jenny Crane into a small town conflict that has big city ramifications.

Mystery Night is free, although reservations are requested for seating and refreshments. Call 383-2665.

IT'S HAPPENING

CDC to stage 'Plaza Suite'

The Cohasset Dramatic Club presents the Neil Simon comedy "Plaza Suite" Oct. 13, 14, 20, 21, 27 and 28, at 8 p.m., and Oct. 29 at 2 p.m., at Cohasset Town Hall.

Tickets are $10 and can be purchased at Front Street Books in Scituate and ButtonWood Books in Cohasset and Hingham or by phone at (781) 925-5439.

Gala reunion

The class of 1950, Hingham High School will hold its 50th reunion on Sept. 29, 30 and Oct. 1. (The class had a vehicle in the Fourth of July parade in Hingham.)

The reunion committee has planned three days of events that will start Sept. 29 with a tour of their old high school, the present town hall. They were the first class to graduate on the front lawn. Classmates may park at the Hingham Bathing Beach, Route 3A and a shuttle will take them to the tour which will start at 1 p.m. and conclude at 3 p.m.

Classmates will then move to the Sea Crest Resort in Falmouth where two days of activities have been planned. Many classmates have confirmed reservations and will be coming from all over the United States.

Additional questions will be answered by calling Danny Valentino (749-2562) in Hingham, John Connell (383-1499) in Cohasset, or Bob Drew (545-4114) in Scituate.

Forum on stopping handgun violence

Stop Handgun Violence - South Shore will conduct a forum, all views welcome, to continue the education and debate about what the responsibility is of ensuring safe and proper handling of guns. The group will look locally, first, to discuss and understand how citizens may best serve children, so they will not fall victim to handgun violence. All candidates, who won last week's primary, have been asked to speak about their views. John Rosenthal, chairman and co-founder of the non-profit group Stop Handgun Violence will also be joining the forum.

Also invited to share their views are state representative candidates Democrat Garrett Bradley and Republican Mary Anne McKenna; state Sen. Robert Hedlund, state senate candidate Democrat Jim Cantwell, Detective Rick Grassie, Cohasset Police; Peggy Chapman, member of the Cohasset Board of Health. All school officials, clergy, selectmen have also been notified.

The forum is Thursday, Oct. 5, St. Stephen's Episcopal Church, Walton Rodgers Hall, 16 Highland Ave., Cohasset, at 7:30 p.m. (This hall is not handicap accessible. Stop Handgun Violence apologizes for any inconvenience. Its next meeting will be held on premises with accessible accommodations) If you have any questions please call: Amyra O'Connell 383-1574 , Diana Kinch 383-3191 or Connie Afshar 383-6006.

Theater veteran directing Hull play

The Hull Performing Arts will present "Let's Murder Marsha," written by Monk Ferris at the Ann Scully Senior Center, 197A Samoset Ave., Hull, Oct. 27, 28 and Nov. 3, 4, at 8 p.m. This show is being directed by Dee Chaput, a 20-year veteran of the theatre. Most of her time acting and directing has been spent with the Milton Players in Milton, but since moving to Hull she has performed on stage in "Barefoot in the Park" and "Tom Foolery" with the Hull Performing Arts. Her husband, Bob Chaput, her stage manager, also appeared on stage in "Tom Foolery" and is also a 20-year veteran of the theatre. For information about the show, call 925-2406. Tickets are $10 at the door, $9 with reservations and $8 for seniors and students.

Fire open house

October is National Fire Prevention Month with Fire Prevention Week taking place from Oct. 8 to 14. And, Papa Gino's, the Dedham-based pizza chain, in conjunction with the National Fire Protection Association, is teaming up with local fire stations to help educate the community on fire prevention. For the past eight years, Papa Gino's has been donating pizza parties each October for fire stations willing to host open houses and promote fire safety. The Cohasset Fire Department is holding an open house Sept. 30, from 1 to 4 p.m.

Some of the exciting visuals include firefighters demonstrating the way to escape a smoke-filled room, fire prevention tips and training, Sparky, the fire-safety mascot, interacting with the children. Each year, fires claim thousands of lives throughout the state. Fire Prevention Month is geared toward educating the community and preparing them for potential fires. Each year, these fire prevention open houses help to better prepare families in the event of a fire and hopefully save lives.

For more information about the fire prevention open houses, call 383-0616.

An advocate for the students

sure is placed on administrators to make sure the town's students stay within the district.

"We've set high standards for ourselves," Jones said recognizing this. "We offer an excellent educational atmosphere for students.

He spoke about a recent retreat with the incoming freshman class to New Hampshire, as an example of the special type of educational opportunities the school system provides. "It was a great way to bond and get to know them," he said. "It was the kind of retreat that reinforces the fact they are a community and learn how to relate to each other."

He has also been pleased to learn how supportive the community is of the schools, evident through the town's recent decision to undergo a $40 million renovation of the middle/high school and Deer Hill School, though the onus will be on him once the project starts in the spring to keep the school functioning properly.

"Every phase will require some kind of adjustments," he said, adding that he is confident life at Cohasset Middle/High School will continue with "minimum classroom disruptions."

One of Jones' first priorities is improving the lines of communication between the school and the community. Though on the job for little over a month, he already has a mental checklist of things he hopes to accomplish, such as a monthly newsletter to parents, an updated and improved school webpage, and expanded email capacity to the faculty. Internally, he hopes to send out a weekly memo to the school's faculty and occasionally drop in on classes. On Tuesday, he followed around a seventh-grade class for a couple of periods to get the feel of a typical day.

Luckily, for Jones, he is able to take his time in learning the school, its students and the community, because if its recent success in the state MCAS testing. Last year Cohasset Middle/High School was at or near the top in every category. The result, said Jones, is that the school's curriculum doesn't have to be tailored to teach towards the test. And even if the school's scores were lacking, he doesn't see the test as the "be all and end all" of education.

His focus is on providing a complete education for Cohasset Middle/High School students. "[Prepping for the test] is not something we've got to put a lot of time into, though we do have to make sure we are prepared for this exam, and that marginal kids have the extra preparation...We need to make sure the students are as academically accomplished as can be as well as athletically and socially," he said. "Part of an outstanding high school is that we provide a quality liberal arts education...That we balance academics with athletics and arts and extracurriculars."

Jones' own children have a wide-range of interests. Two of his kids attend Boston University and are interested in music and archeology, respectively, and his youngest is a senior in high school but interested in physics and math.

Because in college students are asked to narrow down their focus of studies, Jones said it's really while in high school students get the most complete education. "No time in their lives will they ever do that again," he said.

His concern of education's complementary issues – such as the social and extracurricular aspect – extends into the middle high school. Like Curt Collins, his predecessor, Jones believes strongly in the importance of having a good middle school program "It's a good move in developing a child," he said. "It helps grow and transition in a place where the social and academic demands are difficult."

Jones was complimentary about the middle school system Collins implemented. He said a traditional complaint about middle schools is that they aren't academically demanding enough, resulting in under-prepared ninth graders. "Collins increased the time devoted to academics. He went from 43 minute classes to 50 minutes and increased the amount of English, social studies, sciences and math [a student has to take]."

For Jones, Cohasset isn't a stepping stone to bigger and better things. "I look at Cohasset as the high point of my career," he said. "I believe this is where I'm going to achieve whatever it is God has planned for me in education."

Weir River Farm to open Oct. 7

The Trustees of Reservations, a Massachusetts conservation organization, will permanently open the 75-acre picturesque Weir River Farm, to the public on Saturday, Oct. 7. A guided walk will start promptly at 1pm and dedication ceremony and reception with refreshments will follow. Admission is free.

Hingham resident, Polly Thayer Starr, donated Weir River Farm to The Trustees, in 1999, to preserve it forever for public use and enjoyment. Since that time, The Trustees has been preparing the 80-year-old farm for visitors. Walking trails have been cleared, trail markers and interpretive signs have been erected, and farm buildings have been spruced up. Additionally, a management plan was created to guide staff on the day-to-day and long-term property management complexities.

"My mother would be so pleased if she were here today, knowing that The Trustees will be preserving the farm in perpetuity," said Starr. "My family's involvement with The Trustees of Reservations dates back to 1943 when my mother first donated 30 acres of the Weir River Farm to be added to Whitney Woods Reservation. I'm happy to be following the good example she set for me."

Starr inherited Weir River Farm from her mother in 1960, and at that time, transferred ownership of her parent's summer home to the New England Friends for use as a retirement facility. She continued to summer on the farm until 1996 in a house built in 1933 as a wedding gift from her mother.

"My mother would be so pleased if she were here today, knowing that The Trustees will be preserving the farm in perpetuity."

— Polly Thayer Starr

Weir River Farm is situated on the slope of a gently rising drumlin and boasts summit views of Massachusetts Bay and the Boston Harbor Islands. Today, the farm includes 10 acres of hay fields and 65 acres of managed woodlands. A garden path with flowering shrubs and perennials runs north and south along the western boundary. Buildings on the site include two houses, a large barn, a handsome carriage house and a well preserved stable. All of the buildings are linked by a paved driveway traditionally called "the avenue". Trustees' staff occupy the two houses and the Trustees' South Shore and Cape Cod Management Unit maintenance center which oversees twelve of the organization's reservations in the region, is located in the barn.

During the guided walk around the farm on Oct. 7, Al Newcombe, son of Harold Newcombe, the farm's caretaker for more than 60 years, will speak of his memories growing up on the property. Later in the walk, Vicki Starr, daughter of Polly Thayer Starr, will talk about her memories of exploring the magnificent gardens and great estate house (now the New England Friend's Home) when she was a girl. Following the walk, a dedication ceremony and reception will be held.

The farm access will be from Turkey Hill Lane in Hingham. Take Leavitt Street off Route 228 at the Hingham Public Library and follow for 0.6 mi. and bear left onto Turkey Hill Lane and follow to end. For the Opening Day event, volunteers will direct traffic to parking area.

Following Opening Day, the farm will be open daily to visitors from 8 a.m. to 5p.m. for walking, jogging, picnicking, landscape painting, photography and nature study. For more information, contact The Trustees of Reservation, Southeast Regional Office at 781/821-2977.

Looking from East Street in Hingham toward the barn and stone bridge of Weir River Farm, The Trustees of Reservations prepare to open the farm permanently to the public on Saturday, Oct. 7, with a guided walk that starts promptly at 1pm and will follow with a dedication ceremony and reception. For more information call The Trustees at 781/821-2977.

Building for aging boomer population

By Marilyn Jackson
STAFF WRITER

As America's population grows older — graying is no longer the appropriate word, especially with the connotations that the word brings — adults 55 and older are trading in their big homes, where they have raised a family, and are looking at active adult communities to spend their future years.

New construction starting on page 7

And while the Sun Belt states of Florida and Arizona once lured these older residents by the droves, today these folks are staying in New England to remain near their family and friends. If they do head South, it's only for a few months.

Active adult senior housing is the latest development trend, which is expected to continue for the next decade as baby boomers downsize and opt for a more leisurely pace of life. These adults may have grandchildren, but they don't consider themselves candidates for the rocking chair. They are looking for amenities of resort communities, with golf courses, clubhouses, organized activities.

"One thing that's unique about this adult market, nationwide, is that most people are no longer permanently locating to a warmer market; rather, they want to be within 90 minutes' [drive] from where they have lived the last 15 years," said Richard Carlson of Northborough, a senior housing marketing consultant.

Carlson will be one of the speakers at next month's National Association of Home Builders' senior housing show in Detroit to discuss with industry professionals how to target marketing efforts to this age group.

"One of the most successful age-qualified communities is Southport in Mashpee," said Carlson of the village-style development.

On the South Shore, several developers have capitalized on this trend — and the need — for such age-qualified housing as the number of households in this age category continue to increase at a greater rate than the population. According to the National Council on Senior Housing, households between the ages of 55 and 64 will exceed 20 million nationally by 2010, compared to some 13 million households in that age group today.

And municipalities have responded favorably, although taking sometimes painstak-

Dillon Bustin, curator for the "Hands of the Ancestors" show at the South Shore Art Center, watches as a mural created by Native American artists from Maine is put into place at the Cohasset Gallery. The show opens to the public with a reception Saturday (Sept. 30) from 6 to 8 p.m.

Vessels into the past

Algonquian art comes to Cohasset

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

On Saturday, 14 artists will come together at the South Shore Art Center in Cohasset to put on one of the most unique exhibitions ever.

The newest and much anticipated "Hands of the Ancestors," show features the works of 14 Native American artists from Algonquian tribal groups around New England and Canada. The show will run through Nov.12, at the art center's gallery. The opening reception — which is free and open to the public— will be held Saturday, Sept. 30 from 6 to 8 p.m.

All of us have been heavily inspired by our tribal cultures. I think this show will be an excellent introduction to people to what this regions indigenous people's art forms are like."
Mashpee resident and featured artist Ramona Peters

"All of the Native American tribes that live in New England and Canada have one language form—the Algonquian language," said the show's coordinator and art center executive director Dillon Bustin. "This show will give people the opportunity to see what Native American artists are doing these days."

Bustin said the show will feature a number of artistic forms—paintings, sculptures, bead jewelry, artistic videos, and even musical instruments.

But he said the predominant crafts being exhibited at the show are "vessels" in the form of baskets and other sorts of containers.

"The vessels include things like baskets made of sweet grass and brown ash tree," Bustin said. "There will also be other containers constructed from birch bark, along with clay pots inscribed with geometric and symbolic drawings."

Bustin said the show will satisfy the hungriest of artistic appetites, and he added there are lessons to learn while attending the show.

Meadow Geese Press takes flight

Children's title is publisher's first book

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

Software engineer Steven Aucella had no idea the online automotive reviews he wrote years ago would steer him toward the publishing business, but it has.

The Marshfield resident and founder of Meadow Geese Press is set to publish his first book "When it rained Cats and Dogs" next month. Based on a poem written by Nancy Byrd Turner in 1946, and geared toward children, the book will be available in stores in October but is already on display at Marshfield's Ventress and Clift Rodgers Free libraries.

"It's a beautiful little book," Aucella said.

When it Rained Cats and Dogs" was illustrated by Aucella's friend Karen A. Jerome of Needham.

Jerome said she jumped at the chance to illustrate Aucella's first publication. She has worked on 19 other children's books, and what's more, she enjoys painting with Aucella's wife Jody on a frequent basis.

"All the illustrations are watercolors," Jerome said of the book. "They were tough to do only because I had to do research on a lot of different types of cats and dogs. It was also tough because I wanted to make the pictures different than the one that was originally published in 1946 — I wanted to redo it through my own eyes. For instance, in the old book, a lot of the cats and dogs fall directly on the ground. I made it so they fall on things like trampolines, slides, and chimneys. I didn't want children to think the cats and dogs were getting hurt."

"It's a very inviting, interesting children's book."

"I would like to have Meadow Geese Press be a self-sustaining company. I don't want to be Random House, but I want to have a steady cash flow and a nice back list of books to publish. After all, it doesn't make sense to publish junk."
Software engineer and book publisher Steven Aucella

But what's even more interesting is how Aucella decided he wanted to start his own publishing business.

"I work as a software engineer at a place called Intranet in Newton," Aucella said. "Three years ago, I was the ad director for an online magazine about Ferraris (vintage automobiles). Later on, I ended up doing book reviews on different kinds of automotive publications."

In his reviewing exploits, Aucella started discovering old out-of-print books about cars—one book which captured his attention in particular was an Italian book called "Una Curva Cieca," the story of a great race-car driver named Achile Varzi.

Aucella also discovered another out-of-print book about another race car driver, Phil Hill. It was at that point that Aucella decided he would love to reprint both books, so he began to brush up on the publishing business.

"The more and more I thought about the concepts of bringing back old books, I kept saying to myself 'I can do this,'" he said. In 1998, with the help of Beverly Thomas, the former director of the Winslow House in Marshfield who is now deceased, he did so. Thomas learned that Aucella was trying to start a publishing business and had just the project to get him started.

"She had the rights to the poem called 'When It Rained Cats and Dogs,'" Aucella said. "(Thomas) wanted to give me a nice book to start with. I got together with (Jerome), who is pretty good friends with my wife, and we just started working on it."

The first printing of 5,000 of the new books is underway. Aucella said the last two years have been spent on getting that book out, and they have also been spent working on additional titles to publish — including the stories of race car drivers that set him on this high speed publishing course.

One of Aucella's upcoming titles includes a new English translation of Una Curva Cieca, which he hopes will be out next year, as it was only recently he got the rights to the book.

The second book Meadow Geese Press will publish is a book of poetry called "Coasts," illustrated by Aucella's wife Jody. It is due out in December.

Chive pesto

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

I say "pesto" and you immediately think of basil, right? Yes, basil is the most common herb used in pesto, but you can make this simple combination of fresh herbs, nuts, olive oil, cheese, garlic, and salt with almost any ingredient, including chives, mint, parsley, pistachios, or almonds. I was particularly interested in a chive pesto because this herb, unlike basil, grows like a weed. It comes up early and keeps growing well into the fall, and, if chives are store-bought, they are relatively cheap.

I started by using a standard basil pesto recipe and simply substituted chives, but the mixture tasted too much like onions. I thought that by adding a small amount of another herb I could balance the flavor, so I tested basil, parsley, and arugula. The basil made an odd partner for chives. The arugula was peppery and fresh but overpowering. Parsley, which, like chives, is both plentiful and inexpensive, was just right. After much fiddling, I ended up with 2 1/2 cups of chives and only 1/2 cup of parsley.

I settled on only one clove of garlic – the chives already add an onion flavor – and pine nuts tasted better than other sorts of nuts, including almonds, which were a bit sweet. Some recipes call for toasting the nuts, but I found that raw pine nuts worked just fine. (Note that pine nuts go stale quickly, imparting a sour, stale flavor. Taste one before buying.)

For the cheese I tried both Parmesan and Romano, and the former was the clear winner – the Romano was simply too harsh for this recipe. Be sure to purchase the best-quality Parmesan – Parmigiano-Reggiano – which has a sharp, nutty flavor and will cost you about $12 per pound. It is worth every penny. Oh, and be sure to use a high-quality extra-virgin olive oil since it is a major ingredient. So-called "pure" olive oil has virtually no flavor and is good only for frying or other cooking situations in which the oil is heated.

CHIVE PESTO

This recipe makes a great pasta sauce, but you should also try it over steamed red potatoes. Use the highest quality olive oil and Parmesan.

2 1/2 cups coarsely chopped chives
1/2 cup coarsely chopped flat leaf Italian parsley
1 medium clove garlic, crushed
1/4 cup pine nuts
1/2 teaspoon salt
1/2 cup best-quality extra-virgin olive oil
1/2 cup grated Parmesan cheese

Place all of the ingredients except the cheese in a food processor. Process until very finely chopped (sort of like a grainy paste) but not pureed.

Remove from the processor into a bowl and stir in the cheese. Serve over hot pasta with freshly ground pepper and additional Parmesan.

Enough sauce for one pound of pasta (serves 4)

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 27

This may be a slow-starting morning. The final stage of the new moon begins at 7:22 a.m., when the moon enters Libra. Venus, the planetary ruler of Libra, forms a 90-degree alignment to Neptune at 3:34 p.m. Things may not go as planned. Others may be careless, forgetful, late for appointments. This influence is favorable for developing projects that need creativity and imagination. However, this is not a time to make practical decisions or commitments. Influences turn around completely at 3:53 p.m., when the new moon culminates at 5-degrees Libra. At this time the green light for new starts goes on.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 28

New beginnings across the board are recommended between 9:28 a.m.-12:57 p.m. You can make great strides toward personal or professional goals. The Libra moon continues active travel until 12:57 p.m., when it forms a harmonious contact to Uranus. Mercury moves into Scorpio at 9:28 a.m. Mercury will begin retrograde travel next month, when it reaches 15-degrees of Scorpio. The evening is prime for a social gathering or romantic rendezvous.

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 29

The giant planet Jupiter takes center stage this morning. Jupiter, standing at 11-degrees Gemini, begins retrograde travel at 8:53 a.m. Its influence adds an upbeat, optimistic mood to this time period. The Libra moon is inactive until 11:29 a.m., when it enters Scorpio. Take time out for yourself this morning. Focus on personal issues. Put recent losses, crises behind you; set new intentions and goals. If you carefully organize your time, you can be most productive this afternoon. A lunar alignment to Neptune between 4:25-7:25 p.m. may bring a lull period in the day. Enjoy a quiet evening with the love in your life.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 30

A Scorpio moon makes this a day to get things done. Focus on projects you've left on the back burner. You can get them out of the way in short time. Others may be moody, pensive, difficult to get along with. Back off rather than stir up resentment. Keep your nose to the grindstone; hard work will pay off. The moon aligns with Uranus at 6:42 p.m. and becomes inactive for the remainder of the evening. Look within for answers and you'll find what you need to get back on track.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 1, 2000

A Mercury retrograde period affects the latter half of this month. If you plan to launch important enterprises, be sure to get them off the ground in the next ten days. However, the combination of a 90-degree Mercury/Neptune alignment and inactive Scorpio moon makes this a day to kick back, relax and unwind. Don't take anything or anyone too seriously. At 6:50 p.m. the moon enters Sagittarius, and a polarity of the moon and Saturn at 8:03 p.m. may bring a lull period. Stay upbeat and go with the flow.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 2

Conflicting planetary influences affect the next few days. An applying 90-degree alignment of Mars and Pluto warns you to use extra caution when driving or operating machinery. Direct your passions and dynamic energies into constructive channels. This influence is highlighted this afternoon, when the moon interacts with Mars and Pluto. The good news is that the moon travels in optimistic Sagittarius, and a harmonious Venus/Mars alignment occurs. It is best to launch new activities before 1:50 p.m., when Venus and Mars interact.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 3

At 4:03 a.m. the Sagittarius moon becomes inactive for the remainder of the day. However, alignments of the sun to Pluto and Jupiter occur. The Mars/Pluto alignment culminates at 7:55 p.m., and Mars prepares to interact with Jupiter tomorrow. Stop, look and listen. Cool your heels and don't act on impulse. This is not a day to initiate new activities or make important decisions, sign contracts. Instead, follow through on projects already begun. Take extra quiet time out for yourself.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 4

The planetary tug of war continues. The moon enters conservative Capricorn at 5:42 a.m. On the other hand, a 90-degree alignment of Mars and Jupiter generates an impulsive 'let's just do it' kind of mood. Channel high energy productively; tackle big work projects, plan a busy schedule. Influences rate high for new starts across the board. Sign important contracts before 8:40 p.m., when the moon forms a harmonious contact to Mercury.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 5

The first quarter phase of the moon occurs at 6:59 a.m. It serves as a reminder that a full moon is building and will culminate October 13. Initiate new activities before 8:34 a.m., when the Capricorn moon aligns with Venus and becomes inactive. The remainder of the day rates high for catching up on unfinished business, handling routine chores and errands, cleaning out and reorganizing.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 6

The moon continues inactive travel in Capricorn until 6:33 p.m. You can be productive today. However, new starts are off limits until 6:33 p.m., when the moon enters Aquarius. The period between 6:33-7:28 p.m. is particularly favorable for launching important ventures, especially regarding business, career. The remainder of the evening rates high for relaxing, partying. Forget your troubles and go for the good times.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 7

The moon travels in Aquarius throughout the weekend, making it one of the best for socializing, traveling, exploring. Keep an open mind; go with the flow. No schedules, no expectations. Put recent pressures and worries on the back burner. An applying alignment of Venus/Uranus promises an exciting, 'anything can happen' kind of evening.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 8

The Aquarius moon aligns with Uranus at 4:55 a.m. and becomes inactive for the remainder of the day. Venus forms a 90-degree contact to Uranus at 10:20 a.m. No major planetary activity occurs after that. This is a great day for vacationing. Take a break from routine and responsibility. Enjoy favorite sports, hobbies, friends. Relax and recharge your batteries.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 9

The moon enters Pisces at 6:36 a.m. A harmonious alignment of the sun and Uranus replays the theme that has been in effect this past weekend; do your thing, enjoy life to the fullest. The only potential stumbling block occurs in the early morning hours, when the moon aligns with Saturn. Wake up in a good mood. Don't let minor obstacles get you down. This influence passes over by 8:30 a.m., and the remainder of the day rates high across the board.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 10

A Pisces moon all day generates a laidback mood. There is one rough spot, however, in effect between 9:18 a.m.-12:18 p.m., when a polarity of the moon and Mars occurs. Stay alert and use common sense. You can make gains developing projects that require creativity and imagination. It is okay to initiate new activities this afternoon and evening until 9:09 p.m., when the moon becomes inactive.

True country

Dave Foley Band looks and sounds like the real thing

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

Country music as an industry will never die. But these days, longtime fans of the music itself might be asking this question: Is it all still really country?

There's Shania Twain, who's gone from genuine country roots to pop-crossover at a level where she's doing TV-spots in Revlon ads and charting singles in which the fiddles sound more like synthesizers. And then Garth Brooks, who when not creating a Kiss-meets-country spectacle in concert, has decided he'd rather be some sensitive-guy alterna-pop singer/songwriter named Chris Gaines. And then the CMT (Country Music Television) Network, which is all too often a ho-hum production line of the latest pop-crossover video clips.

Dave Foley and his self-named trio-combo play country music the way the way it used to be, and may still be once again. And not just as defined by the classic old-school of such pioneers as Hank Williams, Johnny Cash, Merle Haggard and Jimmie Rodgers, but with a nod to even a few years back and the 80s New Traditionalist country movement of George Strait, Dwight Yoakam and Randy Travis as well. The band also looks the part, favoring fringed, embroidered cowboy shirts and vintage instruments such as Foley's 1955 Gretsch Country Club guitar, bassist Rich Holbrook's 50s-era acoustic upright axe and drummer Mal Shaw's 1966 Ludwig drums.

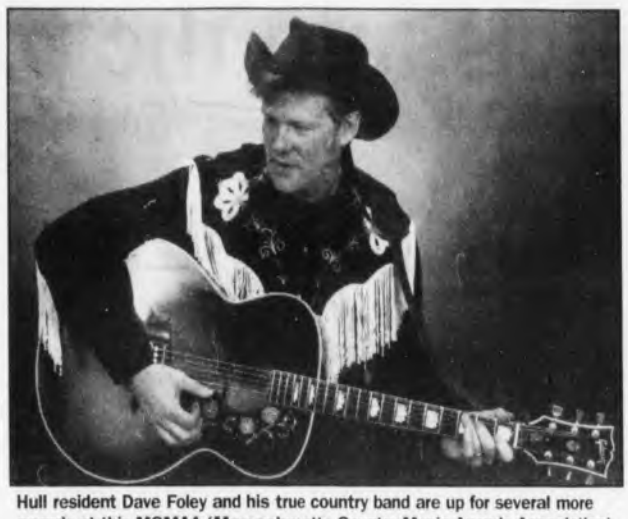
"I've always preferred the old country and roots-rock-a-billy music to the more modern stuff of my own generation," said the 37-year-old Foley. "I grew up listening to the records by George Jones, Merle Haggard, Ernest Tubb and Hank Williams that parents owned, and I remember I just got really hooked on that music and wanted to find out more about it. I still have all of those records at home."

All this comes from the Hull-based Foley and his three partners, who are also natives of the region, which has never exactly been a major national market for country music. But the band's decidedly retro-love approach has yielded them good results on their home turf, as earlier this year the three-some took home the Outstanding Country Act prize at the 2000 Kahlua Boston Music Awards.

This was added to an impressive awards sweep for the band a few months previously at last year's MCMAA (Massachusetts Country Music Awards Association) presentation, an annual event held at Lombardo's, off Route 128, in Randolph. The 1999 show saw Foley and crew snapping up six awards, including Entertainers of the Year, the People's Choice Awards and Album of the Year among others.

The Foley Band is up for a carload of nominations once again at this year's MCMAA ceremony, taking place as always at Lombardo's on Monday (Oct. 2) at 8 p.m. The trio stands to repeat last year's triumphs in most of the categories awarded, and is further nominated in the category of Best Vocal Harmonies, plus individual nominations for Foley as Male Vocalist of the Year, Bass Player of the Year for Holbrook and Drummer of the Year for Shaw.

One of the repeat categories is



Hull resident Dave Foley and his true country band are up for several more awards at this MCMAA (Massachusetts Country Music Awards Association) presentation. The annual event will be held at Lombardo's in Randolph on Monday, Oct. 2.

Album of the Year, for which the Foley Band took the prize in '99 for its debut CD, Holey Moley It's Dave Foley. This year's entry for nomination from the band is its follow up disc, Breaking Old Ground, an all-originals effort in a decided turnabout from the debut, which mixed some Foley originals with covers of traditional country chestnuts by George Jones, Hank Williams, Jimmie Rodgers and others.

"Breaking Old Ground is self-descriptive in that it contains original songs that we've been carrying around and playing at club dates for a long time. So when we finally got around to cutting them in the studio, we wanted to do a simple sounding CD, not quite produced like the debut. That disc was recorded at studios in Nashville and Brockton and featured members of George Jones' band along with all of our players, so there was a lot of mixing up of different players on different tracks with the music moving in a lot of different directions production-wise," Foley said.

"This time we recorded only locally and used only one other musician besides our regular band members, that being pedal steel player Frankie Blandino. All the recording and mixing was done on very low-tech 8-track equipment at the studio and at home, which we thought was the ideal situation for making the kind of stripped-down honky-tonk and rock-a-billy album that we wanted to make. On our next CD, we'll probably want to take some other kind of fresh approach once again," Foley said.

Along with the members of the Jones band, the guest players on Foley's debut disc included his father, Arthur Foley, who was a noted pedal steel player for many years on the New England and sometimes national country music scenes before he passed away last year. Foley's mother, Linda Murphy, of Hull, is an avid country music collector and fan. Dave Foley currently lives with his wife and four children in Hull.

The MCMAA presentation will be hosted by singer/actress Sandy Martin, who's best-known in the local area for her popular theatre production tribute to the late country diva Patsy Cline, A Closer Walk with Patsy Cline. The live performance spots during the awards show will include Foley and bandmate Holbrook playing a two-song acoustic set.

"It's a book showing the intimate poems of a woman named Mary Kennan Herbert from Brooklyn," Aucella said.

Aucella said he will continue looking for new books to publish, but he said it is tough to balance his software engineer job and his new venture. Eventually, he is hoping he can dedicate himself fully to his own business.

But for now, Aucella is excited about "When It Rained Cats and Dogs."

"All the people who have seen it say they love it," he said. "It's really a nice little book, but it's still to early to tell how it's going to do in terms of reviews."

One person giving the book rave reviews is Aucella's five-year-old daughter Katie.

"My new business didn't affect her until she saw a stack of books (When It Rained Cats and Dogs) show up in the driveway," he said. "She looked at them and her eyes lit up. She only started reading about four months ago, but she already has her own copy of the new book."

"I would like to have Meadow Geese Press be a self-sustaining company," Aucella concluded. "I don't want to be Random House, but I want to have a steady cash flow and a nice back list of books to publish. After all, it doesn't make sense to publish junk."

For more information on Meadow Geese Press or to order a copy of "When It Rained Cats and Dogs," call (781) 834-3957. The book can also be ordered online at www.meadowgeeesepress.com.

Vessels into the past

"People will learn that Native American artists are still around," he said. "And they will discover that they come from communities worth learning about."

"For most Native American artists, it is impossible to separate their art from their culture.

South Shore Art Center Curator Dillon Bustin

Bustin said one of the most interesting aspects of the Native American artists is that their art work and their beliefs go hand in hand—in other words, their work is a direct reflection of who they are.

"For most Native American artists, it is impossible to separate their art from their culture," he said.

"Most of my (art) subjects deal with family, searching, struggle, and strength. All these things are part of my art, and my art gives me strength for my continuing spiritual quest," said featured artist Alan Syliboy of Nova Scotia.

Monica McKenney hangs a contemporary piece at Hands of the Ancestors show.

STAFF PHOTOS/ALAN CHAPMAN

Dillon Bustin admires a Native American marionette which will serve as a centerpiece for the SSAC show "Hands of the Ancestors."

"I think for all of the artists in this exhibit, including myself, artistic inspiration comes from a very old tradition," said Mashpee resident Ramona Peters, another featured artist in the show. "All of us have been heavily inspired by our tribal cultures. I think this show will be an excellent introduction to people to what this regions indigenous people's art forms are like."

"Hands of the Ancestors represents a very interesting combination of contemporary art and hand crafted art being pursued in the way these artists' ancestors pursued their crafts," added the art center's director of development, Monica McKenney. "One thing that is unique about this show is that these artists have never been brought together in this area. We've never done anything like this. The show was specifically put together for the South Shore Art Center."

"Hands of the Ancestors represents a very interesting combination of contemporary art and hand-crafted art being pursued in the way these artists' ancestors pursued their crafts. One thing that is unique about this show is that these artists have never been brought together in this area. We've never done anything like this.

South Shore Art Center Director of Development Monica McKenney

Bustin said he has been involved with these type of artists for quite a long time.

"My experience working with Native American artists goes back to my college days," Bustin said. In the early 1970s, Bustin worked at Plimoth Plantation in the research department. At the time, he also started developing friendships with members of various Native American tribes.

During the 80s, Bustin worked at the Massachusetts Counsel on Arts and Humanities where he developed funding programs for various art exhibitions and festivals.

When he took his current job at the art center in 1996, presenting an exhibit featuring Native American art was in the front of his mind. Now his plan has become reality.

"Here at the art center, we're developing a track record for doing shows with international artists with multi-cultural content," Bustin said. "This show is going to be very rich in artistic and cultural value. We're getting a lot of calls about it from people who are curious to see it."

Brudnoy AT THE MOVIES

Gwyneth Paltrow and Scott Speedman get ready to try their luck at karaoke.

David Brudnoy
CNC Film Critic

Duets (B)

One learns so much from the movies, like, for instance, that karaoke still thrives. How about "Macarena?" Are doofuses still doing their Al Gore imitation and singing that atrocity, too? Now that we've got that out of the way and are willing to accept that six characters, two by two by two, will all wind up at a big-money ($5,000) karaoke contest in Omaha, we can turn to the story, which has not won the universal hurrahs (to say the least) of my critic brethren. These stories are dished out in haphazard form, but they're interspersed with some impressive singing, all of which — know this from someone who has a preference for lyrics that can be comprehended and melodies that can be hummed, thus excluding much of the crapola of our era — I liked, sweeping the movie along in the music's wake.

A sadsack cutie (Scott Speedman), who owns half a cab and discovers that his wife is cuckolding him with his best pal, who owns the other half, is dragooned into driving out West by a chippie (Maria Bello) who willingly offers one and all, in exchange for the drive or hotel room, what Monica gave Bubba for free. Not a romance made in heaven but a vehicle, literally and figuratively, to propel these two on eventually to Nebraska. We have a lounge singer turned karaoke hustler (Huey Lewis) who meets up with the daughter he never knew he had (Gwyneth Paltrow), a Vegas showgirl without much sense of life, and she sticks to him like glue as first he, then she, belts out tunes along with the karaoke machine. And finally, we have a depressed traveling salesman (Paul Giamatti, "Pig Vomit" in "Private Parts") who, realizing that on the road he didn't know where he was and at home finding a wife and kids who couldn't care less, goes a little nutty and sets out to locate freedom. He finds, instead, a charmer who just happens to be a criminal (Andre Braugher, less menacing than on "Homicide" but much chubbier), and off they go.

How these six interrelate is not a textbook case in plausible screenwriting, but, save for Braugher, who lip-synchs (quite effectively), the others, who actually sing, sing gloriously. Lewis, of course, is a professional singer; the others, to my knowledge, are not. Give me "Feeling Alright," and "Hello, It's Me" and "Try a Little Tenderness" and "Betty Davis Eyes," just to name a few, and I'll put up with the gawky, sometimes embarrassingly sophomoric writing in return. The acting varies widely, Paltrow sleepwalking, Braugher sliding through but for a few pat speeches of encapsulated wisdom — he is the only really thinking character — Speedman getting by owing to his nice guy-stud looks, Lewis clunking about when not warbling, Bello overdoing it, but Giamatti really taking hold. This reliable second-banana actor, here going over the top in ways that had me inwardly cheering, may become a cult hero for salesmen who've had one cancelled flight too many. "Duets" isn't the tops, it's not the berries, but it gets us to Omaha. That's something.

Written by John Byrum; directed by Bruce Paltrow. Rated R

Almost Famous (B+)

As I've said (and said), pop music more or less died after the mid-'70s, but as Cameron Crowe also shows in his excellent, jiggy new "Almost Famous," the rock phenomenon just about then began to take a turn toward the crassly commercial that helped cause its ruination. (I know; people will scream that it's still alive and well. To each his own.) This is the story, prettied up some and stripped of nuance but not of verve, of Crowe's own emergence, in his mid-teens, as a rock writer for Rolling Stone. Some of the names have been retained, like critic Lester Bangs (a bravura cameo by Phillip Seymour Hoffman, who can do no wrong and here does everything right). Bangs serves as one of the two anchors of common sense in the tale, advising our young hero not to befriend rockers and to keep is disinterestedness always. Most of the names are made up, like the band Stillwater, whom our boy, William Miller (newcomer Patrick Fugit, all moon-faced, peach-fuzzy and frisky-dopey), gets the chance to follow around, and the performers whom he tries repeatedly to interview but mainly winds up just brushing next to as they do and say their stupid things.

The other font of common sense and the other A-list performance is that of William's mother (Frances McDormand), who is afraid of rock, convinced that her son has been kidnapped by these long-haired freaks and just knows that he'll be turned into a dope fiend and deprived of his virginity. She's only partly right, but mom's repeated phone calls with her are a funny basso ostinato throughout.

The film trails the band's bus, with William onboard, he yearning for that interview and beginning to yearn for Penny Lane (Kate Hudson, Goldie Hawn's sound-alike daughter), who insists that she's not a groupie but rather a kind of muse. She and her pals consider themselves the Band-Aids, though we learn soon enough that Penny's a plaything and treated so cavalierly by her beloved — she loves him, not he her — that we gasp at the realization. William resists the temptation of those omnipresent drugs but not everything else. He's drawn, as a budding critic and hopeless romantic, to the rockers (notably Billy Crudup and secondarily Jason Lee), he's toyed with and offered the eradication of his virginity by the girls — almost every teenage boy watching this movie will imagine himself to be William and hope for such a fate — and he's hounded by the inescapable harassing preachments from his mother, who finds him everywhere when he's not dutifully calling her, and the memories of that advice from the savvy Lester Bangs.

So much goes on here that it's dizzying. The classic rock is great, the stuff written for Stillwater isn't, McDormand and Hoffman are superb, the new boy, Fugit, could go either way, to Tobey Maguireness or to Macaulay Culkinism (one hopes for the former), Crudup shows again that he deserves a top-shelf starring vehicle to strut his stuff, and Crowe ("Jerry Maguire") clearly infuses this with all his being. The movie just flies.

Written and directed by Cameron Crowe. Rated R ingly long. Cluster zoning has enabled some of these developments to proceed, while others have been built under the state's Chapter 40B comprehensive permitting law which allows greater density as long as there is an affordability component incorporated into the project.

But what is particularly attractive to South Shore towns is that these over-55 adult communities don't strain town services in the same way single-family subdivisions do, which add to the burgeoning school-age population and require more classrooms, if not new schools.

Active adult communities offer a wide range of prices as well as an equally large spectrum of amenities, including golf courses; the emphasis is on service-enriched yet independent living.

On the more modest end of the economic scale, Oak Point in Middleborough is a master-planned community of 700 single-family homes on 800 acres of forestland, while Twin Brooks in South Easton is a 51-lot community of single-family homes for those 55 and older.

At Oak Point, which boasts a $2 million clubhouse and a social director for a wide range of activities, home prices started at $141,000.

Empty-nesters attract attention of developers

Donovan's Farm in Norwell.

Similar homes at Twin Brooks begin at $222,400. This development will have a clubhouse as well where residents can gather and become acquainted, creating a new community among themselves.

Norwell has two age-qualified residential complexes: Donovan's Farm and Jacob's Pond, although the latter has an age requirement of 62 or older.

At Donovan's Farm, which is being developed by Modern Continental Enterprises, 40 homes — 36-single-family townhouses and two duplexes — and a clubhouse will be built on 15 acres of a 45-acre site surrounded by fields and meadows. The town acquired the 175-acre Donovan Farm several years ago, and then voters approved a cluster zoning bylaw to enable to project to move forward.

Thirteen of the homesites are under agreement, and another three have been reserved, according to Lorraine Marino and Jean Clark who are marketing the community which will be built out by the end of next year.

Jacob's Pond was Norwell's first condominium development, built under a comprehensive permit, offering 33 units at market rate and another 11 at something less than $100,000.

Just as Oak Point took nearly 10 years to win various state and local approvals before the community could start construction, another over-55 development took nearly seven years to finalize. Called Weathervane, the Bristol Brothers Development Company has just begun building the roadway into its development which calls for constructing a distinctive golf course off Liberty Street in South Weymouth, near the Rockland town line. The nine-hole course will be the major drawing card for a community of 125 single-family detached homes and townhouses.

On the South Shore, several developers have capitalized on this trend — and the need — for such age-qualified housing as the number of households in this age category continue to increase at a greater rate than the population.

And J.P. Gallagher and Sons of Hanover, which has been developing single-family neighborhoods in Hanover for several years, hopes to build a community for the active 55-adult age group in Hanover. Those plans are preliminary, Jay Gallagher said in a recent interview.

The 55-and-older age group is growing, and builders and developers want to provide housing for this market, especially if it is high-end single-family homes, townhouses or condominiums, said Carlson.

Two developments are successfully serving this group. At Chapman's Reach, which is in Marina Bay in Squantum, 15 single-family homes and 61 condominiums will be built on a 19-acre site.

The price range of these attached condominiums range from $369,000 to $559,000, while the single-family homes cost between $589,000 and $729,000.

Adults of all ages are welcome to live in this development, but clearly the over-55 group is targeted, he said. "Until people see it, they can't appreciate it."

Prospective buyers have looked at the Back Bay, Beacon Hill and the waterfront and then come to Chapman's Reach, where they discover they can be close to the water, near shops and restaurants, not far from the Expressway and the city "for a price unheard of" by comparison, he said.

The Pinehills in Plymouth is another community which is age-targeted. A partnership of The Green Companies, New England Development and Wallace Associates, Pine Hills LLC plans to develop and build during the next 10 to 15 years more than 2,800 residences in a variety of neighborhoods, a village green for business and retail and four golf courses, two of which are nearly completed. In addition, the Marriott plans to open a 250-room resort on the site. The land once had been earmarked for the world headquarters of Digital Equipment Corporation.

There are other age-qualified and age-targeted developments on the South Shore as well, indicative of the demand for communities that include resort properties, golf courses or club houses with social directors.

These over-55 adults may not want to admit they are at the age of retirement, because they want to purse an active lifestyle and these communities provide just that.

Deal dismantled due to missed deadline

By Anthony Summers

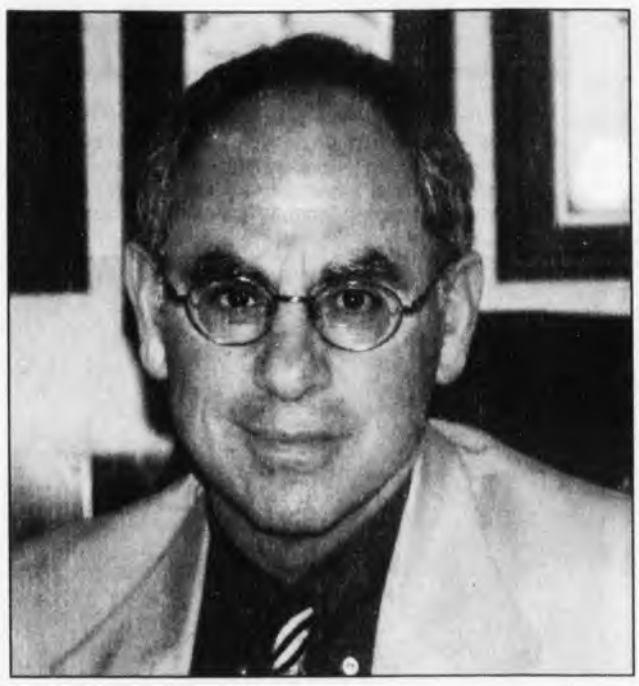
When is a deal a deal? Just where is that elusive moment when the nibbled bait releases the trap door, and the prize is won? Can a real estate broker get paid a commission even when there is no sale? The Superior Court case of Real Advantage vs. Howard Hood provides one of the answers to that question.

Background

Real Advantage Inc., the plaintiff, a real estate brokerage firm, entered into an exclusive listing agreement with Howard Hood, the defendant, to sell 8.8 acres owned by Hood on Linebrook Road in Ipswich. The intention was to locate a developer who would obtain town approval for six to eight house lots.

On Jan. 27, 2000, a purchase-and-sale agreement was signed with Thomas Groom, the buyer, calling for a closing no later than Aug. 15, 2000. The agreement also provided that if the town did not approve at least six lots, the buyer had a right to terminate and obtain the return of his deposit. Since there was no town sewer in Ipswich, homes were serviced by septic systems, which require that the ground percolate at a certain minimum established rate. Percolation measures the speed at which water is absorbed into the ground. Without satisfactory percolation, no approvals could be obtained for house lots.

Percolation tests are administered under the watchful eye of the town of Ipswich, and sometime in March



Anthony Summers

2000, the buyer submitted an application with the town to schedule a percolation test. To Real Advantage's dismay, it was discovered that the application deadline was Feb. 16 of each year.

Obviously, the late-filed application meant approvals would be delayed for one year. Therefore, there could not be a closing on or before Aug. 15, as required by the agreement. The delay was enough to kill the deal, and the buyer terminated the agreement.

The disappointment of losing a $44,000 commission inspired Real Advantage to search for someone to pay. The finger of fate pointed to Hood, the owner of the land. After all, if Hood had been paying attention, he would have and should have been aware of the filing deadline. And so, Real Advantage sued Hood for the commission.

Discussion of law

In Massachusetts, a real estate broker may still be entitled to a commission, even when the closing does not occur. The case of Tristram's Landing v. Wait held that a broker is entitled to his commission even if there is no sale as long as (1) "the broker produces a purchaser, ready, willing and able to buy, (2) the purchaser and seller enter into a binding contract, and (3) there is wrongful conduct on the part of the seller which undermines completion of the sale."

Decision

In this case, there was no indication that anyone was aware of the filing deadline. Further "there is nothing which suggests any conduct or inaction taken by the seller that was calculated to frustrate the consummation of the purchase-and-sale agreement." At best, this is a case where the seller was inattentive to an important detail. The broker, therefore was not entitled to a commission.

Legal advice

I'm puzzled! Here we have commercial real estate broker selling land to a developer, and no one knows about percolation test deadlines? In this case, the $44,000 commission was lost because a simple detail was overlooked by everyone. As they say, "The devil's in the details."

Passage of Community Preservation Act hailed

The Massachusetts Association of Realtors (MAR) expressed its support for Gov. Paul Cellucci signing the Community Preservation Act on Sept. 14. The signing took place at the Robert Treat Paine Estate in Waltham.

As proponents of the CPA and its approach to fund preservation projects and other community-wide initiatives through a property tax surcharge, the MAR praised state lawmakers for eliminating transfer taxes from the CPA and crafting legislation that affords communities the opportunity to address the issues of open space preservation, affordable housing and historic preservation in an equitable manner.

"We are deeply appreciative of the hard work and commitment to the CPA shown by the governor and the Legislature," said MAR President Fred Meyer.

"This is a major achievement, a partnership of realtors and environmentalists for good purposes. This CPA will provide cities and towns with the ability to make sound land use decisions with a fair and sensible funding stream," Meyer said.

Additionally, MAR officials said that lawmakers' decision to adopt a process where a community's residents can decide at the ballot whether or not to accept a small property tax surcharge to fund the CPA, is a positive development for homebuyers and sellers.

"Making sure that community-wide benefits such as open space and affordable housing are paid for by the community as a whole is both fair and logical," said MAR's Vice President of Government Affairs, David Wluka.

"The spirit of cooperation between the governor and the House and Senate leadership, that led to making this law a reality, is truly laudable."

"We are deeply appreciative of the hard work and commitment to the CPA shown by the governor and the Legislature."

The heart of this home is the exquisitely-designed kitchen featuring cherry cabinetry with glass doors, granite counters, gas cook-top and spacious breakfast room that gently flows into a fireplaced family room with built-in media center. This floor also has a library with cherry built-ins and that all important first-floor master suite.

The second floor has an expansive balcony with skylights overlooking the kitchen and family room; three generous bedrooms, two with built-ins and window seats; a family bath plus an enormous media room with its own private bath — perfect for teenagers or an au pair.

More than 4,000 square feet, lots of windows to allow the light in, private wooded backyard, three-car attached garage, central air conditioning, irrigation and security systems, invisible fence — everything has been thought of.

Fall renovation of lawns and gardens - Part II

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

Stroll through your gardens and landscape and begin compiling a list of projects. Make note of problem areas and plants which require division, transplanting or pruning.

As the season changes, warm summerlike days intermingle with crisp, comfortable evenings. Many gardeners experience a renewed energy and often a sense of urgency to plant bulbs, trees and shrubs as they begin preparations for putting their gardens to bed for the year. The soil is warm and easy to work and Mother Nature usually provides reliable rainfall to moisten new plantings. With so many tasks to be performed in early spring, this is an ideal time to get a head start on next year's projects.

Stroll through your gardens and landscape and begin compiling a list of projects. Make note of problem areas and plants which require division, transplanting or pruning. List changes to be made and take photographs which can be studied after dark or shared with your local nurseryman. Be sure to note how much sun these areas receive and at what time of day as this greatly affects what can be grown in a given location. As your list is likely to be endless, try to prioritize your projects beginning with those which require immediate attention. Seeding lawns, taking cuttings of frost sensitive plants and preparing houseplants which vacationed out-of-doors for the summer for their return to indoor environments should be high on your list.

A garden notebook is almost a necessity for any passionate gardener. Throughout the growing season, notes should be taken as to when plants bloom, voids which need to be filled, and plants which need to be relocated. Weekly photos of the garden can be an extremely useful tool. Although we would like to think that we will recall changes we plan to make when cooler weather arrives, once the plants stop blooming, it is difficult to remember how the garden appeared months ago. A well-organized notebook, with sections for changes to be made, appealing plant combinations, a wish list, and a diary of your own garden's weekly bloom with accompanying photos, provides a history of your garden and saves hours of time once the fall arrives.

Even an exceptionally well-planned garden or landscape requires an occasional revision and after many years, a total renovation may be a necessity. Depletion of the soil, the maturation of plants and environmental influences take their toll on both the plants and the hardscape plus it seems to be human nature to seek periodic changes in our surroundings. We redecorate our homes and update our wardrobes. Similarly, even a successful garden needs a facelift once in a while to give it new vitality and to eliminate some of the clutter that accumulates during the years.

We redecorate our homes and update our wardrobes. Similarly, even a successful garden needs a facelift once in a while to give it new vitality and to eliminate some of the clutter that accumulates during the years.

Renovations often require that you become a ruthless critic, particularly with overgrown plants. The removal of only a few plants may provide the necessary space for other established plants to find sufficient growing room but in many instances, years of overcrowding produces lopsided plants which may never regain an attractive shape despite judicious pruning. Foundation plantings which have been constantly clipped for a period of 20 years or more are difficult to rejuvenate and usually necessitate the total eradication of old, woody shrubs. Replacing only a few of the tired shrubs tends to be problematic as your new introductions are generally considerably smaller and disrupt the elements of balance, scale and proportion.

If a major landscape or garden renovation is planned, be sure to take time to thoroughly evaluate your site. Make notes throughout the daylight hours as to the site's exposure to light, which may have changed dramatically through the years due to the maturation of woody plants. Analyze the quality of your soil and consider having a soil test performed to determine its pH.

Newer perennial borders may require only a few modifications. The addition of spring-flowering bulbs, several new perennials or minimal transplanting may be all that is needed to resolve color clashes, strengthen a particular pattern or modify height or space arrangements. Other borders may call for a little widening or lengthening to accommodate those new perennials you found on sale or to make room for vigorous growers which have started to encroach on the edges of the current bed.

Very tired, overgrown gardens may require more drastic measures to bring them back to their original beauty. Depleted soils, or those which may have become compacted over the years, will need replenishing with compost and manure, peat moss, lime and fertilizer.

In order to properly incorporate these additives, nearly every existing plant may have to be lifted. It may be wise to research some of these valued plants as some resent transplanting and should be left in place while others can be temporarily relocated and replanted once the improvements are complete. Large borders should be done in stages.

Share seedlings and divisions with gardening friends or heel them into holding beds or the vegetable garden as crops are removed. Garden renovations can be hard work but your efforts will be rewarded with a healthy, rejuvenated landscape full of glorious flowers next season.

Green thumbs up

Information is current as of September 25, 2000. For information on specific mortgage programs, call the lender. Rates, points, and programs are subject to change daily and cannot be guaranteed. Points include discount fees and origination fees. Quotes = rate+total points/APR (annual percentage rate), calculated as follows: conventional 20% down and $100,000 mortgage, jumbo 20% down and $252,700 mortgage, FHA 3%--5% down and $100,000 mortgage. Most quotes are for 30-day lock-ins, but can vary. Maximum conventional loan amount is $252,700; jumbo loans are in excess of $252,700. ARM--adjustable rate mortgage. ARM rates are quoted as follows: rate +total points/APR (type of ARM program is listed in parentheses). LTV--loan to value. MI--mortgage insurance. NA--not available. NQ--rates not quoted. Lenders, to be listed in this paid advertised column, call 480-905-8000 or 1-800-CNS-8525. Mortgage rates and programs are updated online daily. Phantom is a big, tall and heavy adult male Doberman. He's strong on a leash, but not jumpy or hyper. He is frisky in the play yard - prances around with a tennis ball. He has a docked tail and cute floppy ears. He is not happy in the kennel - woofs, and whines and paces around - he definitely misses human contact. Please come see him and give this dog a chance! If you would like to find out more about Phantom, or perhaps another of our homeless friends, please call us. Canine Connections is a non profit organization. Funded only by donations from the public, we network with many area shelters to find homes for the animals that do not have a family to care for them. Our hotline is 781-440-0477.

Ce Ce & Friends Humane Society is a non profit all volunteer cat shelter providing a clean and warm environment until loving, permanent homes are found. All cats have been examined by a veterinarian & tested for feline leukemia & feline AIDS, are up to date on all vaccinations and, if old enough, spayed & neutered. New volunteers are welcome. To adopt or for more information, call 617-328-5812

The problem with consolidator tickets

By George Hobica
COPLEY NEWS SERVICE

George Hobica

Q. We purchased a consolidator ticket from a travel agency and now we can't use it. The agency tells us that it's nonrefundable. We can't even apply the value of the ticket, minus the usual $75 change fee to a new flight later in the year on the same itinerary and same airline. Our money is just gone.

Do we have any recourse?

A. This is one of the problems with consolidator tickets (those great fares you see in the fine print ads in the Sunday paper or that you get from a discount travel club): They're often "final sale" and you can't get your money back if you can't use them.

Also, in this era of delayed and canceled flights, remember that consolidator fares usually can't be transferred to another airline (whereas most "published" fares can be). So, you have to wait for the next available flight on your original airline in the case of a flight irregularity. And some consolidators go out of business, leaving people stranded.

Considering all this, it's buyer beware. You might be better off next time just waiting for a great sale fare or getting a cyber fare on the airlines' Web sites rather than using a consolidator ticket.

Q. I rarely miss your column in the travel section. It has always been interesting and informative. I was disappointed, however, in your reply to the reader who asked about Southwest Airlines' standby policy. I would have expected that your answer would have included something like, "I asked Southwest about this and they told me, etc."

I thought the reader did an excellent job in articulating an actual experience, and it would have made your reply much more valuable if you had given us the airline's reply.

A. This issue has certainly sparked a lot of reader response! Apparently, many travelers object to Southwest's lack of flexibility on standby travel. I did ask Southwest's PR department to respond, and they did. But, to be honest, their answer didn't make any sense to me, so I didn't publish it.

Another reader wrote, "I couldn't agree more with your response on this issue. I have experienced the exact same problem numerous times with Southwest and find their inflexible attitude illogical. For an airline that prides itself on being customer oriented, this one area is hard to understand. Perhaps more pressure can be made on Southwest to change."

I should point out that Southwest doesn't let you stand by for a later flight on the same day, either (if you miss your flight and want to take the next one, you have to upgrade your ticket from a discount fare to a full fare).

Another reader wrote, "The impression that, with the exception of SWA, airlines universally do not charge to stand by for earlier flights is incorrect. Northwest requires you to pay $75 to stand by for an earlier flight."

As far as I know, this isn't true. I checked with Northwest and they said that on most fares, even discounted ones, same-day standby travel is permitted with no additional charge.

Q. You've mentioned senior coupon booklets in past columns. Is there an airline that allows a senior to bring along a companion of any age at the same low rate?

A. Most airlines don't allow seniors to bring a companion of any age at the same low price. However, for $100 more than its regular senior travel coupon four-pack, TWA does offer a companion option. And, US Airways lets you take up to two grandchildren along using its senior coupons.

Q. My husband and I are celebrating our 20th anniversary and want to take an exotic vacation. We saw a documentary on Palau and it seems fabulous. Do you have any information to share about this place, such as where to get a package deal? I don't personally know anyone that has vacationed there.

We were originally thinking of Tahiti and Bora Bora, but Palau sounds more interesting.

A. Palau is an island nation located in the Micronesian Islands, 800 miles southwest of Guam and 700 miles east of the Philippines. Best known as one of the world's most spectacular diving sites, it's noted for its remarkably clear waters and the thousands of species, which dwell in them. Over 1,500 species of fish and more than 700 species of coral and anemones can be seen in Palau's waters.

For more information on Palau, visit www.visit-palau.com.

To book travel to Palau, call Continental Airlines Vacations at (800) 634-5555, ext. 5, or visit www.coolvacations.com.

New Construction

IN BRIEF

Free First Time Homebuyer Workshop

Neighborhood Housing Services, an MHFA and HUD approved First Time Homebuyer Counseling Agency, will be holding a free First Time Homebuyer's Workshop in partnership with Jack Conway Real Estate. This unique partnership was established to better serve the needs of the first time buyer.

The workshop will be an all day workshop on Saturday, Oct. 14. It will be held at the Jack Conway School of Real Estate at 183 Columbia Rd., Hanover. The one day workshop will begin at 9 a.m. and continue until 3:30 p.m. Lunch will be provided.

The agenda will be comprehensive as well as individualized. The focus will be on different aspects of the home buying process, including how to locate a property within your budget, how to make an offer, and determining the best mortgage program for your needs. Each participant will have an opportunity to meet personally with mortgage professionals, realtors, and an attorney. Participants will learn how they can purchase property with little or no money and how to best utilize local down payment and closing costs now available across the South Shore.

Advanced registration is required and space is limited. Call Debbie Kidd at Neighborhood Housing Services at 617-770-2387 for more information and to register.

Help for new home buyers

The Neighborhood Housing Services, an approved First Time Homebuyer Counseling Agency, will be holding an accredited and MHFA certified First Time Homebuyer's Workshop in collaboration with the Massachusetts Co-Operative Bank on Saturday, Oct. 7. The workshop will be held at The Roche Brothers Supermarket, 2nd floor community room, 101 Falls Blvd., Quincy, from 9 a.m. until 3:30 p.m.

Attendance at this one-day workshop is mandatory to receive your home-buying certificate which is mandatory by most lenders to qualify for the many different mortgage options such as the Mass Housing Finance Agency, Soft Second Programs, down payment and closing costs grants and other special first-time home buyer financing options.

Neighborhood Housing Services is non-profit organization dedicated to assisting first-time buyers through the home-buying process. The staff at NHS is unique in their approach to obtaining down payment and closing costs assistance as well as rehab grants for their clients, which are available throughout the entire South Shore area. Don't miss this opportunity to find out how you or someone you know can buy a home with little or no money down.

The agenda will be comprehensive and individualized. The focus will be on the many changing aspects of home-buying, including how to locate a property within your budget, how to make an offer, and determining the best mortgage program for your needs. Advanced registration is required and space is limited. A $10 refundable registration fee is required.

Marina back before ZBA

Switches gears to gain zoning relief

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Though he hasn't dropped his court appeal, Cohasset Harbor Marina owner Paul Trendowicz is trying a different strategy to solve his ongoing battle with the Cohasset Zoning Board of Appeals.

The ZBA previously ruled that the Cohasset Harbor Marina is zoned in two different ways, with part of it zoned for light industry use, and another part zoned for residential. Under town bylaws, marinas are allowed in light industrial districts, but not in residential districts without a variance.

In the spring of 1999, Trendowicz, with proper federal and state permits in hand, began expansion of the marina from 35 slips to more than 80. However, neighboring residents on Border Street and Parker Avenue claimed the expanded dock crossed into a residentially zoned district and

Line dancing a hit with seniors

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

On Thursday afternoons, Cohasset seniors can now learn how to boogie down, senior style.

In the basement of the Cohasset Community Center, a half dozen seniors are learning the latest in line dancing, getting down to songs such as "Sweet Lida Rose," "Caravan," and "All-American Country Boy."

Leading them is a pair of experienced dance partners, who have now been tripping the light fantastic together for more than 67 years.

"See how happy we make these people", asked Dori Sherman, one half of the dancing Shermans. Alongside Dori is her husband of 61 years, Howard. Together, the two have been giving senior line dancing lessons for more than 10 years, and recently started a class in Cohasset.

"We're just starting a brand-new class," said Howard Sherman, who generally leads the dance instruction. "We're starting out simple and slow and then we'll gain some momentum. We're trying to get everyone's hand out of their pockets."

On this particular day, nine participants drifted in and out as Howard led the seniors through the steps of a half dozen different types of line dancing. He demonstrates a grapevine, bringing his left foot behind his right, steps forward, back, taps the right toe, pivots 90 degrees, and then starts it all over. He led the group in a soft, confident voice, and though a recent bout of sciatica forced him to occasionally relinquish the lead to Dori, he was still spry and agile enough to quickly glide over the tile floor, through the steps when able.

"We're starting out simple and slow and then we'll gain some momentum."
— Howard Sherman, 85

Occasionally Dori gently reminded him to watch his pace as he went through the motions. "She slows me down," Howard said afterwards. "And they do well when you go slow," Dori responded.

Howard will spend up to five minutes leading the class through the practice steps of a particular dance. He then turns the music on, and off the class goes — though not exactly resulting in a class full of Ginger Rogers hopefuls.

"I can't wait for everyone to do it perfectly," Howard explained. "As soon as we have enough to do it, we try it."

Howard and Dori first danced on January 5, 1933 – Howard's 18th birthday, as he proudly recalled. "We've been dancing ever since," he said. The Shermans' started taking square and line dance lessons together in 1951. Howard also called square dances for 19 years, and helped start two square dance clubs — the Pembroke Hobomock Hodowners and the Weymouth Belles and Beaus.

Senate candidates spar on Greenbush

By Jeanne M. Rideout
JRIDEOUT@CNC.COM

The man behind the stand was the real issue when the two Weymouth competitors for the Norfolk-Plymouth District Senate seat sparred over Greenbush this week.

Democratic challenger James Cantwell attacked Republican incumbent Robert Hedlund's record on the rail restoration project, and Hedlund accused Cantwell of deliberately misrepresenting his position.

"Hedlund's conflicting signals on Greenbush as an unsuccessful candidate for Weymouth's mayor and his recent blind opposition to the commuter rail line in his current bid for reelection to the state Senate have left his constituents in a weakened position," Cantwell said.

At the MBTA's hearing at the Abigail Adams Intermediate School last Thursday, attended by about 200 Weymouth and Braintree residents, Cantwell quoted Hedlund as saying "I have just notched the white flag up a little higher on the flag post."

"Hedlund's recent conversion does nothing to provide relief for families throughout the district who are concerned about public safety," Cantwell said. "The current restoration plan for Greenbush has numerous flaws which need to be addressed to protect our quality of life."

Cantwell charged that at a candidates' forum sponsored by the Pond Street Improvement Association last September, "Hedlund said that he had been an opponent to Greenbush, but he added that his position might change if he won the mayor's race."

Hedlund disputed this claim, saying he never made the comment and was misquoted in one media account.

"It's not true. It is absolutely not true. It is misrepresenting and misleading and deceitful," Hedlund said. "Cantwell's's just going to keep spinning and spinning and spinning."

At a CNC-sponsored debate Sept. 11 between Cantwell and Marshfield's Ted LeClair, Cantwell's opponent in the Democratic primary election, Cantwell stated he supported Greenbush as long as appropriate mitigation was done.

"I've been consistent on my position since January, 1995," Hedlund, who opposed Greenbush, said. "This is very unfortunate, after Cantwell a week earlier called for a positive issue-based campaign. Cantwell is

Walk helps make strides in fight against breast cancer

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

A simple pink ribbon serves as the symbol for a powerful month-long campaign.

October is National Breast Cancer Awareness Month, and around the country, various cancer-related organizations will be hosting their own activities to recognize the battle against the disease.

In this area, one of the most predominant breast cancer-oriented activities will be the eighth annual American Cancer Society (ACS) "Making Strides Against Breast Cancer" walk on Oct. 15. The 5.7 mile walk takes place along the Charles River Esplanade in Boston.

More than 40,000 men, women, and children from around the region are expected to participate in the walk. Some of those people suffer from the disease. Some are people who have been affected by it indirectly. And some walking are doing so in memory of a loved one whose life was cut short by breast cancer.

"Making Strides is the nation's largest non-competitive walk," said Kate Langstone, a regional ACS executive out of Framingham. "Last year, we raised $3 million at the walk; this year, our goal is $3.5 million. It's unbelievable how many people come out for the event, but then again, breast cancer is one of the leading causes of death among women."

Greenbush update

The Greenbush Mitigation Committee will meet tonight for the first time in more than two months.

The committee last met in June, days after the town was told by the MBTA that it was putting a hold on mitigation negotiation hearings. Now, with some prodding from Governor Paul Cellucci, the MBTA has restarted communications with Cohasset.

"This meeting is going to be an update of where we are what's going on, and the status of the committee," said committee chairman Tom Gruber. "We're once again starting to communicate with the MBTA."

The town also is digesting the MBTA's draft Memorandum of Agreement and conservation and mitigation effects report. Wendy Frontiero, a special consultant hired jointly by Cohasset and Scituate, recently submitted some thoughts and revision suggestions on the drafts. Gruber praised Frontiero's work, as did Town Manager Mark Haddad.

"She has added a lot to the process and gave us a better understanding of what the process means, and how we can use it to the town's advantage," Haddad said. He considered the money used to retain Frontiero "well spent" and was also encouraged by the cooperative efforts demonstrated by Scituate.

Haddad also recently tested the governor's commitment to ensure proper Greenbush mitigation by writing letters to Secretary of Environmental Affairs Robert Durand and Secretary of Transportation Kevin Sullivan requesting the two join selectmen for a meeting in the near future.

In a meeting with local towns last month, Cellucci reiterated his commitment to Greenbush restoration, but also ordered Durand and Sullivan to work personally with the towns along the Greenbush corridor to nail down a workable mitigation package for the area.

Speed deterrent

The worse for the wear condition of King Street may be rough on a car's undercarriage, and crying out for repair, but it has come with one benefit. According to some town residents, it was acted as a traffic and speed deterrent.

King street resident Mark Bell wrote to selectmen proposing "the street stay in this condition," with the appropriate patching "so we don't actually lose and pedestrians or cars."

He also said that because of its condition, motorists have been avoiding the street altogether, resulting in a diminished traffic flow.

Selectmen Michael Sullivan also joked about leaving King Street the way it is for the same reasons at the board's last meeting.

Flu vaccine

The Massachusetts Department of Public Health has notified the Cohasset Board of Health that the flu vaccine will not be available early this season.

The health board is planning to schedule its flu vaccine clinics in November. For a schedule of clinics, residents can either keep an eye out for an announcement in the Mariner, cable television governmental access channel, or call the Social Service League of Cohasset during the last week of October at 383-0771.

Police academy

Residents aged 16 and older who are interested in signing up for the first Cohasset Citizens Police Academy, should call the police business line at 383-1055 or stop by the station on Elm Street to pick up an application. The class will being Oct. 10.

Send us e-mail

Cohasset Mariner editor Mary Ford can be reached by e-mail at mford@cnc.com or by telephone at 741-2933. Reporter Rick Collins can be reached at ricollins@cnc.com or by telephone at 741-2935. The Cohasset Mariner's fax number is 741-2931.

Time for walk-ins

Selectmen set aside 10 minutes early in their meetings, usually at 7:40 p.m., to address any concerns from members of the public who have issues that are not on the agenda.

If the matter cannot be handled briefly, it will be placed on a future agenda. Call Town Manager Mark Haddad at 383-4105 for more information. Selectmen's meetings start at 7:30 p.m.. The next selectmen's meeting is Tuesday, Oct. 10.

Beechwood graves

Gravesites at the Beechwood Cemetery are now available for purchase on a pre-need basis to residents and former residents who resided in Cohasset for a period of one continuous year.

The cost per grave is $725 for residents and $1,000 for former residents. Grave purchases are limited to two gravesites in any cemetery under the jurisdiction of the Town of Cohasset.

Anyone wishing to inquire about purchasing graves should contact the D.P.W. office either in person or by phone, 383-0273.

Conservation commission to consider CHL leachate

Meeting scheduled for Oct. 12 at 7:30 p.m. in town hall

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The members of the water commission believe residents of Cohasset are entitled to a plentiful supply of clean drinking water. One potential threat to the town's drinking water supply, according to the water commission, is leachate oozing out of the Cohasset Heights Limited (CHL) landfill into nearby wetlands and the Lily Pond watershed. The water commission is scheduled to deliver a presentation to the conservation commission on Oct. 12 at 7:30 p.m. in Town Hall to discuss measures to stop leachate from escaping from CHL and posing a potential threat to local drinking water supplies.

"We test our drinking water annually and there has never been any toxic chemicals in the water that enters the treatment plant, and there is no evidence of contamination now," said Water Commission Chairman John K. McNabb Jr. "But there is leachate containing toxic chemicals that is leaving the landfill. It is inconceivable that a landfill that has been closed for two years should be allowed to continue draining leachate. The water commission is doing its job of protecting our water supply by asking the conservation commission to stop leachate from draining out of CHL."

Norfolk Environmental, the water commission's environmental engineering consultant, has prepared a Request for Determination of Applicability (RDA) for submission to the conservation commission. The RDA outlines the potential threat of leachate to the town's water supply, alleged violations of town bylaws by CHL and proposed enforcement actions to prevent leachate from draining into the town's drinking water.

In the RDA, Norfolk states that leachate from the landfill is a danger to Cohasset's drinking water: "Leachate from the landfill has migrated into the monitoring wells and surface water on and adjacent to the landfill and presents a threat to the groundwater quality of the Lily Pond public water supply."

Monitoring wells positioned around the landfill catch drainage water for environmental testing purposes. The water from the wells is tested quarterly. Historically, wells around the landfill have contained elements and compounds such as acetone, benzene, arsenic, barium, lead toluene and 1,4-dichlorobenzene. 1,4-dichlorobenzene, which has been consistently detected in monitoring wells within 1,300 feet of the landfill, is a possible carcinogen and can cause difficulty in breathing, lowered red blood cell counts and tumors through exposure to high concentrations of the substance.

"Although here is no evidence of any contamination in Lily Pond, we shouldn't have to wait until we find contaminants in our drinking water."

— Water Commission chairman John K. McNabb, Jr.

McNabb said one of the problems facing the town is that no one knows what happens to the leachate after it leaves the monitoring wells.

"We don't know what route this stuff takes after it goes past the weils," McNabb said. "We're trying to determine that now by drilling new wells. Although here is no evidence of any contamination in Lily Pond, we shouldn't have to wait until we find contaminants in our drinking water."

According to the RDA, CHL is in violation of the revised Cohasset Wetland Protection Bylaw, which prohibits the discharge of leachate from any landfill into a public drinking water supply or watershed.

The effort to prevent leachate from draining into the town's water supply dates back to 1996, when the conservation commission ordered CHL to stop all sediment and leachate from draining into adjacent wetlands. The conservation commission used local and state environmental laws as supporting authority. CHL appealed the order to the state Department of Environmental Protection (DEP) and to the land court. A judge reduced CHL's burden on the grounds that the town relied primarily on DEP rules that allow landfills to discharge as much as 20 percent of all leachate produced into the ground.

The water commission submitted the new RDA in response to the judge's order allowing CHL to continue emitting leachate into the ground under DEP rules. The new RDA relies only on the town's bylaw, which was amended in late 1999, to prevent landfills from emitting leachate, McNabb said.

"Courts have said that local bylaws trump state bylaws when it comes to environmental protection, but the judge in this case said we relied on DEP's rules, not the town bylaw," McNabb said. "By relying only on the town bylaw, any appeals by CHL will have to go through the Superior Court, not DEP."

Stopping leachate from leaving the landfill is a complicated undertaking. A large portion of the landfill is unlined, allowing leachate to drain directly into the ground beneath. A report commissioned by the water commission last year revealed that bedrock fractures in the ground beneath the landfill have the potential to carry leachate to locations as distant as Brass Kettle Brook. Leachate also comes from rainwater and other precipitation running off the sides of the landfill.

The water commission wants CHL to build a leachate collection system at the landfill. One possible component of the system could be a trench surrounding the landfill to collect precipitation run-off, leachate and sediment. The system, if required, would force CHL to divert all leachate away from Lily Pond and other water supplies to safe collection points.

Commission seeks safe water on all fronts

Preventing the migration of leachate from CHL into the town's water supply is just one of several measures the water commission is taking to protect local drinking water. Norfolk Environmental is using a $45,000 DEP grant to prepare a comprehensive water protection plan for the entire town.

"Our efforts to stop leachate migration at CHL is just part of our wider effort to protect our water as water commissioners," said Water Commission Chairman John K. McNabb Jr. "The plan Norfolk is developing is a soup-to-nuts look at all our water needs and concerns. Currently, Norfolk has completed about 40 percent of the plan."

Norfolk Environmental is pursuing a technical assistance grant (TAG) to monitor an old underground gas tank spill under Doane Court that originated at a former auto garage. The water commission is also considering whether it has any recourse to stop developers in the Arrowood subdivision in Scituate from using new septic systems located close to Cohasset's drinking water source.

In addition, the water commissioners are going ahead with plans to reactivate the Ellms Meadow well-field. The well-field is expected to produce more than 100,000 gallons of water per day when it is reactivated. The old wells fell into disrepair from lack of use. Last year, the town allocated $300,000 to reactivate the wells.

"We're moving ahead on many fronts," McNabb said. "Sixty percent of our watershed is located outside Cohasset. We also need a plan to deal with that. And the MBTA will have to negotiate relocating the Ellms Meadow wells if it reactivates the Greenbush line. We have a lot going on."

Budget hike possible

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Admittedly, Town Manager Mark Haddad isn't a fortune teller. Nor are the town's department heads. So when budgets are set for a fiscal year that won't start for another three or four months, getting the exact budget number needed for the year isn't an exact science.

As a result, the town will bring Article 3 – which selectmen unanimously supported — before this month's fall special town meeting in an effort to revise some budget appropriations that will add more than $315,390 to the town's existing $15.8 million budget.

Among the biggest recipients will be Cohasset Public Schools and town police department. The school system will receive an additional $300,000 in funding, while the police department will get $97,000.

Some of the increases will be offset by more than $340,000 in budget cuts thanks to better than thought debt service interest rate among other things.

For the schools, the $300,000 will be used to fully fund its budget. Haddad purposely under-funded the budget, saying he wanted to see what the state aid sheets and final enrollment numbers would be first, with the hope of avoiding the need for an override.

The police department will use its money on a variety of concerns. According to Haddad, $64,000 is required to pay for coverage of shifts of two police officers currently out on disability. Another $29,000 will be used to purchase a new police cruiser to replace an existing one with more than 100,000 miles on it, and $4,000 will be used for training and the purchase of a used emergency vehicle for the dog officer.

Other budget increases are:

- $8,000 for the board of selectmen's budget to pay the cost of hiring Wendy Frontiero as a consultant on the Greenbush mitigation negotiations (see related week item), and to upgrade the cell phone system for the town's emergency departments.
- $15,000 to reimburse the legal fund for work done in July. According to Haddad, an inordinate amount of legal work was deferred from June until the new fiscal year in July, because of a lack in money in the FY-00 budget. "The July bill was bigger than it should have been and I just want to put the money back in," Haddad explained.
- $20,000 to pay the town's water bill for Town Hall, the public schools, Paul Pratt Library, Alumni Field, Milliken Field and any other piece of public property that requires water. Haddad said, like any resident, the town has to pay its water bill to the town's water department.
- $71,675 to the fire department for water hydrant rental, to rent paging systems, and provide health club memberships to the department as required by state law.
- $77,000 to the Department of Public Works. Haddad said due to the drain three unexpected major maintenance items at the schools – boiler repairs, roof repairs, and a new stage curtain in the middle/high school auditorium – had on the budget, he wants to reimburse the maintenance budget $42,000 for the work. The remaining $35,000 would be a general budget increase.
- $12,000 to the Elder Affairs Board to purchase new office furnishings for the organization.
- $60,000 to the health insurance fund. Because the town now has an unexpected seven additional family plans on its group plan, the cost to pay the town's share requires an increase in the budget. Haddad explained.

On the flip side, the sewer budget has been reduced $144,700 because the north sewer system hookup has been delayed. The money originally was earmarked to go to the town of Hull, which operates the sewer system, but because it is not up and running in North Cohasset, Haddad wants the line item stricken from the budget. Also, $196,625 originally slated to be used for payment of debt service will be returned to the general fund because Haddad anticipated a higher interest rate than the one the town received.

In total, the town budget will inflate from $15,851,079 to $16,170,429 – a 2 percent increase.

The money to cover the budget increases will come from the free cash fund carried over from last year. Haddad said the town has a $829,000 free cash surplus, as a result of higher than expected state aid numbers, and town receipts.

Aside from this budget article, 28 other articles will be debated at the Oct. 23 meeting, scheduled to begin at 7 p.m. at the middle/high school auditorium.

AROUND TOWN

FALL IS HERE

Hello Everyone! I hope all of you are able to take in some of this nice weather and all of the great colors that are around us. The leaves are starting to turn many wonderful colors and the animals are starting their Fall frenzy to find the winter foods. We are very lucky to have such beautiful seasons to enjoy.

RAFFLE WINNERS

What a wonderful job the soccer supporters did in the annual pancake breakfast, held this past weekend at the Deer Hill cafe! With three kinds of pancakes, the wonderful coffee and bagels donated by Atlantic Bagel and the support of many, it was certainly a delicious fundraiser. Congratulations to the following winners of the raffle that was held: Al St. Peter (Adidas Soccer Ball), Kirk Bukowski (Basketball Kit), Nancy Michalowski (Revolution T-Shirt), Larry Evans (RGI Gift Certificate), Brian Connors (Revolution T-Shirt), Pat Hurley (Skippers Cushion), Alex Dedes (Sports Basket, Skippers Cushion), Kevin Lessard, (Village Deli Gift Certificate), Jane Pescatore and Sue Magruder,(Bruins Tickets), Paula Buick (three cans of tennis balls), S. Wigmore (Kick Rocket Game), and Peggy Lee,(Brine Soccer Ball). Great job to all!

WILD ANIMALS

Has anyone been seeing foxes or coyotes roaming the town? If you have, please call Paul Murphy at 383-9119. He is looking for this information to track numbers. Always remember to keep a safe distance from these animals and please don't try to harm them.

FARMERS MARKET

The Farmers Market is held every Thursday afternoon on the Town Common. This is a wonderful event where you can purchase many items, have a pony ride and get the kids faces painted or a tattoo applied (temporary, of course!) Also, you can catch up with friends as you listen and dance to some great music. Make sure to pass the word and head down to the common on Thursday Afternoons.

BIRTHDAY WISHES

A very special Birthday wish goes out to Emma Smith! Emma is turning six and we all want to wish her a special and happy day! Happy Birthday, Emma!

AT MIDDLEBURY

Cohasset resident Elizabeth Myers has joined the freshman class of Middlebury College in Vermont. Liz graduated from Milton Academy in June and was the recipient of the drama award, dance award, speech award and one of six graduating seniors to receive the Head of School Award presented for character, inclusiveness, fairness and leadership. She enjoyed a strong year as captain of the Milton Academy Speech Team, finishing first in New England and qualifying for the nationals. After graduation, she competed in the National Forensic League National Tournament in Portland, Ore. placing in the top 20 in Children's Literature and the top 50 in Dramatic Interpretation. Both divisions had more than 300 competitors in their categories and more than 1500 students competed overall from the United States and Canada. She will be studying literature and theater in college. Congratulations!

OFF TO NOBLES

Noble and Greenough School in Dedham welcomes new student Kayvon Tehranian (04), son of Mr. and Mrs. Reza Tehranian of Cohasset, to the Nobles community. Have a great year, Kayvon!

OPINION

200 acres of open space

With increasing pressures of development breathing down our collective necks — the entire South Shore region can take solace in the fact that preserving land for open space hasn't gone out of style.

Two large parcels of land will soon be added to the greenbelt that makes up Wompatuck State Park, Thayer and Whitney Woods and Turkey Hill.

Saturday, the 75-acre Weir River Farm will officially open to the public. Thanks to Hingham resident Polly Thayer Starr, who donated the land to the Trustees of Reservations, we'll soon be able to visit the picturesque spot that until now most of us could only enjoy from our cars as we rounded the curve on East Street near its intersection with Rte. 3A.

And that's not all. The 125-acre former ammunition depot at the end of Leavitt Street in Hingham will be added to the 3,000-acre Wompatuck State Park once the area is cleaned up.

Hingham town administrator Charles Cristello, state Sen. Robert Hedlund, the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, the National Guard and state environmental agencies have worked for eight years to get the site cleaned up so it will be safe for walkers, hikers, bird watchers and naturalists. The $300,000 needed for demolition of the remaining buildings that date back to World War II is now in place setting the stage for the final phase of the cleanup and eventual opening of the area to the public.

While, as Sen. Hedlund says, we eagerly await the "fence cutting" ceremony signaling the opening of the former depot site to the public — we can all partake in Saturday's festivities at 1p.m. at the Weir River Farm.

During the guided walk around the farm, Al Newcombe, son of Harold Newcombe, the farm's caretaker for more than 60 years, will share his memories of growing up on the property. Vicki Starr, daughter of Polly Thayer Starr, will talk about exploring the magnificent gardens and the great estate house (now the New England Friends Home) when she was a girl. Following opening day, the farm will be open daily to visitors from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.

A win-win situation

The Cohasset Citizens Police Academy is a logical outgrowth of community policing that also includes bike and marine patrols. Once a week for ten weeks, 12 citizens (age 16 and older) will have the opportunity to get an inside look at the police department and what an officer's job entails. Police will also listen to the citizens' concerns. The course outline includes criminal and constitutional law; court procedures; probable cause and elements of crimes; motor vehicle law and accident investigation; domestic violence, child, elder abuse and sex crimes; drug investigations; firearms and use of force; patrol procedures; traffic enforcement and community policing. Ride-alongs with officers are also possible.

The academy will run from 6-10 p.m. on Tuesdays, starting Oct 10, at St. Anthony's Parish Hall. Applications are available at the police station on Elm Street.

Police Chief Brian Noonan said police hope to get a cross section of teenagers, parents and senior citizens to participate.

The academy is a two-way educational process, the chief said. While citizens learn more about the police and why officers make the decisions they do, police gain a better understanding of the views and concerns of the community. It's a win-win situation.

Great teacher

TO THE EDITOR:

There is no doubt that the Cohasset school system has the best group of kindergarten teachers around. Unfortunately, they have also been missing one of the best. Sharon Moody has been hired as a kindergarten teacher in the Scituate school system.

So, for all the Cohasset children who have had the pleasure of Sharon Moody, you were the lucky ones. For all the children who were unable to have had the pleasure, that is unfortunate.

All of her friends and supporters in Cohasset send her many congratulations and best of luck in her new job.

Scituate, while you have gotten one of the best, Cohasset has lost one of the best.

Camp Bournedale

TO THE EDITOR:

A composite of a great outdoor educational program; a group of sixth-grade teachers who enjoy working with their students and each other; cooperative parents, willing to chaperone and fundraise and students excited by hands-on learning and the opportunity to connect creatively with their teachers and peers, this is Camp Bournedale.

We appreciate the efforts of our sixth-grade teachers to commit to this valuable program, which just took place Sept. 25-29. Congratulations on a job well done. I think it's important to recognize when something works.

Real Cohasset

TO THE EDITOR:

Whoa, Rick Collins, for saying, "In a town where parents can afford to send their children to a private school, if they don't feel the public education is good enough . . ." I never could have afforded to send my kids to private school, and I know the majority of the town can't either.

As your editor Mary Ford once said, "Cohasset is an economically diverse town." Indeed it is. Let me take you on a tour of the real Cohasset some time.

Preservation by revitalization

TO THE EDITOR:

Some among us are saying "I like the town just as it is and don t want it changed." Well, it may look OK when one is used to it, but to a visitor it looks pretty neglected. It took more than a century to consolidate the DPW and provide a decent shelter for its staff and equipment, and we'll continue to provide only limited funds from tax revenues for upgrading our public buildings and spaces.

We can participate in the effort to reverse the accumulation of decades of penurious decay; we can stand aside and let it get shabbier; or we can even sabotage the revitalization effort by snide innuendo and by giving credence to the innuendo.

Of course, about 85 percent are blissfully unaware and uninterested in what is happening in town, but too many of the remaining 15 percent are taking a negative view of the initiative demonstrated by Messrs. Odelheide and Roy, principal backers of the nonprofit Cohasset Revitalization Corporation (CRC). Cohasset, like any town, has a stable of individuals whose nay-saying is predictable, and whose opinions are therefore discounted (except for those who have gotten some leverage by getting elected or appointed to one of our numerous boards, commissions, etc.).

What is disturbing is the fact that the individuals considered constructive, fair and objective, who spoil that image by inferring that the backers of CRC are only serving their own business interests, are "trying to take over the town" and similar nonsense that makes the accuser's eyes seem to be growing closer together as he or she speaks. They confuse cynicism with sophistication. But the real sophisticates have a kindlier (and more realistic) view of the motivation of CRC's backers., and recognize the potential advantage to the town of having a focus organization to do something constructive.

Granted, some of the aspects of the initial conceptual drawings, such as the narrowing of Elm Street to provide peninsulas, seem like excessive tinkering. Surely some excesses are to be expected when imaginative architects and visionary planners are let loose, but the visionary plans are a better charting point for future moderation than some stodgy program that is limited to minor cosmetics. What is wrong with well-considered change's? The village has gone through metamorphoses during its two centuries, and a little more isn't necessarily bad. (We have a few extremists that would preserve every detail as it happens to exist at this point of time, no matter how ugly, useless, unsafe, inconvenient, uneconomical etc., but forget that all our current features are only the most recent stage of continuing evolution).

Rather than CRC running roughshod over the town, the difficulty will be getting anything constructive done and in getting sufficient agreement that grant applications are credible. I suggest some appreciation for the initiative shown by the backers of CRC, some more mature assessment of the motivation of its backers, and constructive assistance instead of destructive carping. Rather than resent the backers as newcomers, we should be glad they aren't like many of the buyers of high-priced homes who take no interest in the community.

Runway plans

TO THE EDITOR:

Massport is trying to get the FAA's go-ahead to build proposed runway 14/32. Hull Jet Noise Task Force member Steve Lathrop has painstakingly applied Massport's annual planned distribution of low arrivals and takeoffs to a map of greater Boston. 319,500 flights are planned. Of these, 195,200 are planned to fly low and loud over the South Shore, covering us from Quincy to Cohasset.

Applying my protractor to the map, I note that 61percent of Logan traffic is being loaded onto approximately 22 percent of the total 360 degree arc around Logan Airport. Massport plans to shunt 61 percent of the ants at the picnic onto one-fifth of the pie. That is our slice of the pie, and I ask you, as the new regional Jet Noise Task Force is currently asking our elected officials, why in the world does the South Shore look so defenseless and vulnerable to Massport planners?

Proposed runway 14/32 is a shortsighted and wrong idea. For the South Shore it would be a permanent disaster.

Preserve library

TO THE EDITOR:

I noted with interest the comments of the president of the Cohasset Historical Society, John Hovorka, in his fall 2000 letter to the group's membership.

He speaks passionately of the need to renovate the Wilson House Museum (at an estimated cost of $41,000) which is located on Elm Street. I wish the CHS Society well in its quest, but a higher priority should be its commitment to preserve the Paul Pratt Library for public use.

I appreciate that the CHS feels "building poor" because of its ownership and maintenance responsibility for the Lorthrop House, the Maritime Museum and the Wilson House. If the CHS has to prioritize, the Paul Pratt Library should be at the top of the list.

However, let us hope that the society can have its "cake and eat it too." There should be a few people in this very affluent town who would be willing to make major contributions to buy the Paul Pratt Library when (if) the town declares it excess. They could transfer title to the CHS.

All it takes is a "can do" attitude. None of the wonderful non-profit organizations in Cohasset could see the potential of the Lightkeepers' House when they were first asked to support its renovation. The Historical Society had some of the most skeptical members, but I notice in the same fall 2000 CHS letter that the society is using the Lightkeepers' House three times during the month of October. That is fine. However, it also shows that the society lacks an adequate headquarters (particularly for its awesome gown collection).

Whether it is the Lightkeepers' House, a year-round swimming facility, a teen center, or the Paul Pratt Library, all it takes are a few generous patrons and a lot of community spirit.

COHASSET CARES

The three Rs

By Allan MacDonald
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

That's right, of course you know them: reduce, reuse, recycle.

And which of them is the most important? Recycle, you say? Well, there's food for thought here. There are people who say reduce is the most important, in the PAYT scheme of things, naturally, the way we're all thinking lately, now that Pay-As-You-Throw goes into effect this coming July 2001. Reduce means cutting down on stuff, stuff we don't really need, stuff that is over packaged, disposable stuff—so we'll have less to hassle with when we pay per bag.

The "town of Cohasset PAYT Trash to Recyclable" leaflet is being fine-tuned as we speak. We'll be going over the nuts and bolts with you soon enough. In the meantime let's get ready for the stuff we will have to deal with. Yes, the less we have, the less we pay. It will pay to reduce the amount of stuff we deal with.

Now, or second, there is something more to consider, after we've thought about reducing what we collect, and that is reusing. There's a huge, exciting world of reuse out there. Have you thought much about it? Stay tuned.

Allan MacDonald is publicity chairman of the Cohasset Recycling Committee.

LIBRARY CORNER

New Books

The following is a list of new non-fiction books available at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library.

"Tin Cup Dream," by Michael D'Antonio follows self-taught Mexican golfer's season on the PGA tour. Fascinating look at the PGA now shown on TV, plus dozens of interesting tidbits and anecdotes from golf history.

"The Truth About the Irish," written by Terry Eagleton is very cheeky look at Irish life and culture.

"The Landscape Makeover Book," by Sarah VonTrapp gives you sensible and imaginative hints to transform existing landscape elements to reshape the character of your yard.

"Twice Blessed," tells you everything you need to know about having a second child. Author, Joan Leonard lets you in on how it effects your life, your marriage and your firstborn.

"Conzentrate," written by Sam Horn assembles real-life ways to pay attention despite distractions, pressure and multiple priorities.

Finally, "Quintet" follows three portraits of five musical luminaries, YoYoMa, Jeffrey Tate and others. Writer, David Blum provides a fascinating glimpse into the world of music.

Bradley to work for all constituents

Former Plymouth County Prosecutor and current Democratic Candidate for State Representative Garrett Bradley today addressed the issue of party affiliation in the Third Plymouth District seat. Praising the work of Representative Mary Jeanette Murray, Bradley noted that, "This position is about community experience, not party lines, and I will continue the tradition of active representation."

Bradley pointed to a need for genuine leadership, not partisan politics. "Representative Murray had a special way of providing leadership for our district," stated Bradley. "The voters will send a freshman legislator to the State House who will have to work with other legislators to make sure our voices our heard."

Bradley points to recently elected members of the legislature who represent strong bi-partisan districts. Representative David Torrisi, who represents North Andover and Lawrence, echoed Bradley's sentiment, "In order to succeed in delivering for my district, I must be willing to work with residents, local leaders and state officials. Garrett Bradley has that same desire and will accomplish much for Hingham, Hull and Cohasset."

Representative Peter Koutoujian, who represents Waltham and Newton, also believes that in order to provide for the district, a representative must be able to get the ear of fellow legislators. "None of us work in a vacuum at the State House. We need to be able to listen to and support each other, particularly on local projects. I know that Garrett Bradley will actively listen to his constituents and bring that message to us at the State House," asserted Koutoujian.

Cantwell opens office

As a further sign of Democratic unity, the Jim Cantwell Committee announced that it is expanding its campaign operation to a second Weymouth office. "After our positive primary, Ted and I spoke of the need to combine forces to win," said Cantwell. "I'm pleased to announce that Ted has recommended that we rent campaign headquarters at 837 Broad Street in Jackson Square."

Jim Cantwell is the Democratic nominee for State Senate. A life-long resident of the Plymouth-Norfolk Senate District, Cantwell lives in Weymouth with his wife, Jennifer, and son, Christopher.

McKenna focuses on community

State Representative candidate Mary Anne McKenna attended a series of events last week as she continues to crisscross the 3rd Plymouth District towns of Hingham, Hull and Cohasset. Last week she attended the Friends of the Carousel Pancake breakfast in Hull; the Soccer Boosters rally at the Deer Hill School in Cohasset; the Octoberfest celebration at the Lutheran Church on Main Street in Hingham; and a host of private receptions held by people throughout the District.

McKenna also celebrated the opening of her campaign headquarters on Ripley Road in Cohasset last Saturday. The reception was attended by residents from all three towns. McKenna spoke to the noontime crowd of over 100, "I cannot express to you how happy I am with the way I am being received everywhere I go. I have been knocking on doors every day, meeting voters in their neighborhoods. We share our mutual concerns. This continues to be a wonderful experience for me and judging from the reception I'm receiving, I think they are pleased I stopped by.

"because of the overwhelming control of the legislature by the Democrats, genuine debate on public policy is rare. The legislature controls the purse strings. Taxpayers need to know that the House is made up of 133 Democrats and only 27 Republicans. There is no collective voice on behalf of the taxpayer," she said.

"When I'm out talking to voters at their door, I tell them that I will be giving up my clinical research position to serve this District full time. I'm not a lawyer trying to launch a law practice and I'm not looking ahead to a life long political career. People in my profession care about other people —it's the nature of what I do. My intentions are to be a proactive legislator with a focus on constituent services. My schooling and training is in the field of human understanding and interaction. I view myself as a consensus builder; someone who can promote community cohesiveness and community pride."

To join the McKenna campaign, please call campaign headquarters at 383-1620.

Thank you very much!

MTA backs Hedlund

Sen. Robert Hedlund received the endorsement of the Massachusetts Teacher's Association (MTA) in his quest for re-election to the state Senate.

Hedlund, in his third consecutive term, says this is a major boost to his campaign. "No one is in a better position than teachers to inform the public of which candidate in this race is committed to quality public education. The MTA recommendation, like my record in the Legislature, demonstrates that I put children and their educational needs first," he said.

Of particular concern to Hedlund is the issue of preparing children for jobs of the future: "Public education is the backbone of our society," Hedlund said. "As we prepare our children for the high-tech jobs of the 21st century, it is critical that we provide strong, safe and healthy public schools to learn in."

Hedlund is committed to making sure the communities have the resources to help students learn. Specifically, Hedlund said, "I am proud that I have fought for and won record amounts of state education aid for all eight communities in my district."

"Education is a key issue in this campaign and I have a record of being a strong advocate for the educational needs of our children," said Hedlund. "Every candidate talks a good game on education, but my record backs it up."

The MTA with its 90,000 members statewide, is the largest teachers' union in the state.

Boston Herald to purchase CNC

By Kurt Blumenau
CNC STAFF WRITER

The Boston Herald announced plans on Sept. 28 to buy Community Newspaper Co., publisher of the Cohasset Mariner and more than 100 other publications in eastern Massachusetts.

Herald officials and media experts say the deal combines the Herald's inner-city clout with CNC's extensive suburban penetration, creating a single strong rival to the Boston Globe.

"It certainly will extend the battle," said Pat Purcell, publisher of the Herald and president of Herald Media Inc. "May the battle be joined."

The Herald-CNC combination will boast a combined weekly circulation of 1.2 million and a total readership of 2.4 million, according to Purcell. CNC will operate as a separate entity within the Herald Media holding company, he said.

CNC, based in Needham, publishes four dailies, 89 weeklies, 15 shoppers and eight specialty publications, as well as Town Online, an award-winning Internet site that compiles news from across the region.

CNC, based in Needham, publishes four dailies, 89 weeklies, 15 shoppers and eight specialty publications, as well as Town Online, an award-winning Internet site that compiles news from across the region. CNC papers cover the eastern half of Massachusetts, from New Hampshire, south to Cape Cod.

CNC began in the mid-'80s, when its parent company, Fidelity Capital, bought a handful of weekly newspapers on the North Shore. More than 30 purchases later, the company now publishes a newspaper in communities from Boston to Worcester, north to New Hampshire and south to Rhode Island.

"We believe this has been a great success for us at Fidelity," said Steve Akin, president of Fidelity Capital.

"This is a very complex organization," said Kirk Davis, president and chief operating officer of CNC. "I think Fidelity has done an outstanding job bringing it all together."

Experts said the purchase creates a much stronger news enterprise.

"I think it strengthens the Herald's position in the greater Boston market," said Bill Ketter, chairman of the journalism department at Boston University.

Purcell declined to comment on potential changes to CNC, saying he needs to look over the company's operations first.

But local observers such as Boston University journalism lecturer Mark Leccese — a former CNC staffer — don't foresee changes to CNC newspapers, they expect the Herald will look for behind-the-scenes synergies in printing, advertising and other areas.

"When you buy a business, you want it to continue to do what it does best," Leccese said. "What they're doing here is taking the fight to the Globe."

Globe spokesman Rick Gulla said Globe officials were not surprised by the news, and will continue the paper's suburban focus.

"While we are the No. 1 mass media in the marketplace, we are going to continue to operate with our plans, and serve our readers better and our advertisers better," he said.

Officials from the Herald and CNC did not disclose the purchase price. Both the Herald and Fidelity Capital are privately held.

Herald and CNC officials hope to close the deal by Nov. 1.

Purcell bought the Herald, New England's second-largest daily newspaper, in 1994. In addition, the Herald also operates the online publications Jobfind.com, BostonHerald.com, Homefind.com and Carfind.com.

Forum on stopping handgun violence

Stop Handgun Violence - South Shore will conduct a forum, all views welcome, to continue the education and debate about what the responsibility is of ensuring safe and proper handling of guns. The group will look locally, first, to discuss and understand how citizens may best serve children, so they will not fall victim to handgun violence. All candidates, who won last week's primary, have been asked to speak about their views. John Rosenthal, chairman and co-founder of the non-profit group Stop Handgun Violence will also be joining the forum.

The forum is Thursday, Oct. 5, St. Stephen's Episcopal Church, Walton Rodgers Hall. 16 Highland Ave., Cohasset, at 7:30 p.m. (This hall is not handicap accessible. Stop Handgun Violence apologizes for any inconvenience. Its next meeting will be held on premises with accessible accommodations) If you have any questions please call: Amyra O'Connell 383-1574 , Diana Kinch 383-3191 or Connie Afshar 383-6006.

Ballot questions debated

Barbara Anderson, executive director of Citizens for Limited Taxation and Jim St. George, executive director of Taxation Equity Alliance in Massachusetts will debate the Nov. 7 election ballot questions directly impacting taxes paid by residents of the state at a 6 p.m., Oct. 15, reception at the Hingham Community Center hosted by the Hingham Republican Town Committee.

Carl Harris, chairman of the Hingham Republican Town Committee said, "We are honored to have speakers of this renown to present divergent views on issues of import to all of us so that our friends and neighbors will have full knowledge of the impact of their votes affecting the course of future government here in Massachusetts."

Specifically, these include Question 4 on Income Tax Rate Reduction, Question 6 on Tax Credit for Tolls and Motor Vehicle Excise Taxes, and Question 7 on Tax Deduction for Charitable Contributions.

Linguistic fig leaves

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

An old standup comedian, I think it was Mort Sahl, had a routine in which an airline passenger asked the stewardess, excuse me, the flight attendant:

"What time do we get into Los Angeles?"

"I don't know," she says. "We've never made it."

And then they tell of the pilot who, after going through some turbulence, told the passengers jovially over the intercom:

"Forgive me. I'm just learning."

Well, that's not going to happen anymore, not if the airlines, which have been plagued by late and cancelled flights and occasional flights that don't make it, have their way.

US Airways has issued a guide for pilots and flight attendants to follow when they are dealing with the paying customers.

For instance, a flight is never "late," it just has a "new departure (or arrival) time." There's no such thing as "turbulence," just "bumpy air."

And, above all, never, never refer to the airport where you are landing as a "terminal" or the "final destination." Save that for Forest Lawn.

"If your flight is going to be late in departing the gate, it is better to say 'We'll be departing the gate in 25 minutes' than to say 'We'll be departing the gate 25 minutes late'" says the guide.

I don't know about that. Some flights I've been on, 25 minutes late is regarded as on time.

Whatever, the happy words that are substituted for real ones are known as "euphemisms," although one researcher on the subject calls them "linguistic fig leaves," since they cover up the things we're not supposed to see or hear.

It's like the Green Berets in the Vietnam War used to refer to certain VCs as being "terminated with extreme prejudice." They meant they killed them.

Or the Korean War that became a "police action."

When I was young, and ice covered most of the earth, my editor assigned me to cover a rape trial, which, as everyone then knew, was known on the printed page as a "criminal assault."

Of course, I had to ask the editor: "If there is criminal assault, what is non-criminal assault."

"Shut up and write," he said.

Most euphemisms have to do with death.

No one ever died in the pages of the Christian Science Monitor. They passed on.

One day, we had a story of a Christian Science practitioner who was murdered in her Back Bay apartment.

"What is the Monitor going to say tomorrow?" harrumphed our sports editor. "That she was pushed?"

Deceased Indians "go to the Happy Hunting Grounds." High rolling gamblers go to "Tap City," meaning they are "tapped out" of life as well as money. On the early frontier, a man who died went "up Green River," whether or not he was killed by a knife made at the Green River Works.

Incidentally, the US Airways guidebook cautions pilots and air crews:

"When relaying bad news is inevitable, be honest but upbeat."

Like, when the plane is hurtling into a mountain, remind them that their frequent flyer mileage can be used by their heirs.

Olmsted is topic at annual dinner

The Cohasset Historical Society will feature at talk by Allan Banks from The Olmsted National Historic Site during the society's annual meeting and fall dinner Oct. 29 at Kimball's by the Sea.

There will be a social period at 5:30 p.m. with dinner at 6 p.m. The annual meeting of the society including election of new members of the board of directors and its officers will be held before the lecture.

State rep. candidates differ on tax relief

By Rick Collins
RCOLLINS@NE.COM

For an issue as near and dear to the hearts of South Shore residents, as taxes are, voters will have a choice of tax plans to choose from this fall in the state representative race.

The three candidates running to replace retiring state Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray – independent candidate Walter Murray, Republican Mary Anne McKenna, Democrat Garrett Bradley – have differing opinions on the status of taxes in Massachusetts. McKenna fervently supports the lowering of the state income tax rate to 5 percent over the next three years, Bradley is in favor of a more gradual decrease in the tax rate, and Murray thinks the tax rate is just about right.

"A promise was made to the people of the Commonwealth during the [Michael] Dukakis administration," McKenna said this week in a release. "The promise was such that the increase of our state income tax from 5 percent to 5.95 percent would be temporary. That was 11 years ago and our taxes still remain at 5.85 percent."

McKenna said with the economy booming, a low unemployment rate, and a large surplus, it's time for the state to "be held to the same standards we teach our children, 'keep your promise.'"

Perhaps surprising to some, the Democrat in the race, Bradley, also supports a tax rate rollback, but at a much slower rate. Whereas McKenna is supporting the proposal to roll the rate back over a three-year period, Bradley would prefer doing it over a five-to-seven-year period. He said he wants to "ratchet it down" to 5 percent with an circuit breaker trigger tied to the unemployment rate. "If the [unemployment] rate jumps to 6 percent, it would trigger a freeze in the reduction to see what effect [the tax reduction] has on the economy," Bradley explained. "Once [the unemployment rate] goes back down, the tax rate starts ratcheting back down."

He called his tax plan more "fiscally responsible" than if done over a three year period, with the fear being if the tax rate is not linked to the unemployment rate, and Big Dig costs taking a good bite out of the state budget, the economy could experience a "shock."

"Cutting or raising taxes a large chunk at a time is not good for the economy," Bradley said. "I think we should be sending back money to the taxpayers, but I think we should do it responsibly."

While Murray half-agreed with Bradley that the state needs to be cautious about lowering the state revenue base at a time where the state is struggling to fund needed programs, he doesn't support the tax roll back.

"If you give more discretionary income to people, the state will have less money, so when it comes to funding education...the fear is there won't be enough money for that," Murray explained adding that one of his platform issues is state funding of special education.

He said with a different type of economy today than what existed in 1989, a different result could happen if the rate is rolled back. "I think with a hot economy and low unemployment, it could set off price inflation and work against us."

Murray is eyeing some tax cuts, but would prefer to avoid any "wide-sweeping tax reform." He classified himself not as a "tax and spend" candidate, but instead as a moderate who sees the need for government-funded state projects, such as infrastructure and schools. In general, Murray said he wasn't running with a "gimmicky wide-sweeping, broad tax cut reform," but said he would support focused tax cuts such as ones that support families, or increase the deduction available for families with dependent children.

Bradley, on the other hand, has developed more specific tax proposals. Though against Questions 4 and 6 on the ballot, which would authorize the 5 percent rollback over three years and give an income tax credit for tolls and excise taxes paid in a year, he would support

- a rollback spread out over five to seven years,
- the partial use of the state's tobacco settlement money to help towns with a low commercial tax rate – such as Hingham and Cohasset – pay for unfunded state mandates, and grant property tax relief,
- legislation allowing seniors on fixed incomes that are house rich, but cash poor, to defer paying part of their property tax bills until after their house is sold,
- support the increase in deduction limits for charitable donations similar to what is featured in ballot question 7.

McKenna was the most general in her tax stance, but stated clearly, "When the other side is calling a tax refund 'fiscally irresponsible' in light of the Big Dig costs, I say, 'If the state government has mismanaged our tax dollars to the tune of billions of dollars, why would we want to give them even more of our money to mismanage?'"

She said the tax roll back would not create an unstable economy, saying "we must be careful not to succumb to scare tactics...if next year we find our economy has changed, we can postpone the remainder of the rollback."

According to McKenna the state should give the surplus back to the taxpayers because the "overwhelmingly Democratic legislature will undoubtedly find some way to spend it."

Senate candidates spar on Greenbush

long on spin and misrepresentation and short on specifics on where he stands on this issue. Cantwell wants to make me the issue. I find it outrageous he has finally taken a stand 30 days before the election."

"Greenbush is a very complicated project, more complex than any other rail restoration project in the state. I can understand Jim's being confused about some of the facts since he is relatively new to Weymouth, having moved to town about a year ago," Hedlund said.

Cantwell also charged that Hedlund has "conceded that his opposition to Greenbush has been futile," a charge Hedlund disputed.

"The communities and boards of selectmen in the communities affected by Greenbush know how active I have been on this issue. I'm on the powerful Senate ways and means committee and on the transportation committee. I have been able to work within these committees to insure their concerns will be addressed. I have worked harder than any other legislator to safeguard their interests," Hedlund said.

"Hedlund's conflicting signals on Greenbush as an unsuccessful candidate for Weymouth's mayor and his recent blind opposition to the commuter rail line...have left his constituents in a weakened position."

— State Senate hopeful James Cantwell

Being against Greenbush and being pro mitigation are not mutually exclusive positions, Hedlund said.

"Entire boards of selectmen in some of the affected communities are opposed to Greenbush, but that doesn't mean they aren't working to safeguard their communities should the project be done," Hedlund said.

was in violation of zoning laws. Originally Trendowicz argued that the residential zone did not extend into Bailey's Creek, and that maps showing it did were incorrect. The ZBA eventually ruled against Trendowicz, who then appealed the decision to land court. That case is still pending.

However, Trendowicz was back before the ZBA Monday, arguing that as a grandfathered non-conforming use, which the board did not dispute, he is entitled to expand it with zoning relief.

"He basically said, 'if you have jurisdiction, I would like relief,' explained ZBA chairman Woody Chittick.

Town bylaws allow permits to be granted for the expansion of non-conforming uses if the expansion is "not substantially more detrimental to the neighborhood than the existing use or structure" or "not injurious or dangerous to the public health or hazardous because of traffic congestion or other reason." Trendowicz attorney Michael Bliss submitted a letter to the board from Cohasset Police Chief Brain Noonan which said he ran a search for all traffic complaints on Parker Avenue logged since September, 1998, and came up with 21 speeding complaints. Noonan said 13 of those calls were not related to the marina. He therefore said he "does not believe the expanded marina will create a negative impact on traffic or parking on Parker Avenue."

Bliss also said the expansion met all criteria surrounding non-forming use expansion into a flood plain.

The hearing, as a result, focused on whether the expanded marina would create a negative impact on the neighborhood.

Bliss said the property is classified as a non-forming use, because when the area was zoned in 1969, a marina was already in use there, and thus grandfathered in. He submitted affidavits from John Winters, now town harbor master, and Robert Pattison, a Parker Avenue resident, that they recalled either renting a slip or renting a boat at the site dating back as far as 1957. Bliss also said that the board has no reason to deny approval "because it's a preexisting structure, and meets all the dimensional requirements of the bylaw."

Parker Avenue resident Amory Julian disputed Noonan's letter saying she had called to complain about speeders "at least 50 times" and added that she was "dismayed" over Noonan's claims. Russ Bonetti, also a Parker Avenue resident backed up Julian's dispute claiming he had called police about speeders 15 times, and had kept a log of license plate numbers. "Traffic is not as peachy keen [as Noonan claimed]," Bonetti said.

Other possible negative impacts were raised by Victoria Hurley who read a letter from a federal agency claiming marina expansion would exacerbate the erosion problem Bailey's Creek already experiences. She also claimed that boats moored on the land side of the dock were using motors, despite a conservation commission requirement that they don't. Project engineer Robert Alvarez responded to the erosion issue saying the letter was in response to an early project plan draft, was incorporated into the final draft plans, and is not applicable to the current set-up.

Another Border Street resident complained about trash such as plastic containers, empty beer boxes and Styrofoam coolers washing up along Bailey's Creek.

Richard Henderson, a former town counsel now representing Hurley, asked the board for time to formally respond to Bliss' argument in writing. Chittick continued the hearing to allow Henderson, Bliss and anyone else a chance to respond in writing.

Chittick said, at the least, Trendowicz's argument has his ear for the time being. "It certainly has merit...however I don't know if the merits are strong enough to justify relief. That's to be determined."

The next ZBA meeting date has not yet been set but is expected to be at the beginning of November.

Weir River Farm to open

On Saturday, Oct. 7, from 1 to 3 p.m., the Trustees of Reservations will celebrate the official opening of the 75-acre, Weir River Farm, the picturesque, 20th century, country estate, donated by Polly Thayer Starr to the trustees to preserve it for public use and enjoyment.

Guided walks will be conducted and refreshments will be served. Free. Meet at Turkey Hill Lane. Turn onto Leavitt Street off Route 228 at the Hingham Public Library. Follow for 0.6 mile and bear left onto Turkey Hill Lane. Parking in field on right, just after entrance for New England Friend's Home. Please leave your pets at home.

During the guided walk around the farm on Oct. 7, Al Newcombe, son of Harold Newcombe, the farm's caretaker for more than 60 years, will speak of his memories growing up on the property. Later in the walk, Vicki Starr, daughter of Polly Thayer Starr, will talk about her memories of exploring the magnificent gardens and great estate house (now the New England Friend's Home) when she was a girl. Following the walk, a dedication ceremony and reception will be held.

Scituate Cohasset Newcomers Club makes donations

Scituate-Cohasset Newcomers Club donated a total of $1,700 to two local charities this year.

The Appalachia Service Project, locally led by Rev. Gary Ritts of the Second Congregational Church in Cohasset received $850 from the Club. The donation will aid the efforts of ASP volunteers that repair, renovate, and build hundreds of homes to benefit needy families in central Appalachia.

The Scituate Library also received $850 from the Club, and plans to utilize the donation to fund the purchase of two puppet theaters to support its children's program.

The Scituate-Cohasset Newcomers Club raised the funds through a golf tournament, family Duck Derby, and other fund raisers.

The Scituate-Cohasset Newcomers Club is always open to new members and invites all residents to join the club and enjoy a variety of social activities. The club sponsors Mom and Tot playgroups, a sip n' stitch crafts group, a men's poker group, and several theme parties throughout the year. Please call Gina Leahy of Cohasset at 383-2618 or Sue Hall of Scituate at 545-9552 for membership information.

Far left, Kathleen Knight and Debbie Kuppens, second from right, co-presidents of the Scituate/Cohasset Newcomers Club present checks to the Rev. Gary Ritts of the Appalachia Service Project and Kathleen Meeker of the Scituate Public Library.

Langstone said all the money raised through donations and pledges for the walk is given directly to "the medical community for research. Furthermore, all the money raised stays in Massachusetts."

Langstone added the main functions of the walk are to raise money for that research, but also to increase awareness among people regarding breast cancer and ways of preventing it.

"It really emphasizes the importance of mammographies," she said. "Women between the ages of 20 and 39 should be getting mammographies every two to three years, and they should also be doing frequent breast exams on themselves. When women hit the age of 40, they should be checked for the disease every year, even if they don't have a history of it in their family. Obviously, early detection is the key."

The two major risk factors for breast cancer are being a woman and growing older, said Gena Carter-Brockington M.D., a radiologist and a member of the ACS's breast cancer advisory group. "Making Strides generates awareness, and the funds raised are continuing to help women get the mammograms and support they need. (Making) Strides gives us all a chance to demonstrate our resolve to finish the job of wiping out breast cancer."

She added, "This year alone, over 182,000 new cases of breast cancer, including 4,400 in Massachusetts, will be diagnosed.

Series at a glance

- Today: Making strides in funding for research and a cure
- Part 2: Norwell's Betsy Cunningham and her personal battle with cancer
- Part 3: Duxbury's Cheryl Bergeron refuses to let the disease run her life.
- Part 4: Penny Johnson of Weymouth finds a personal therapy to help others cope; New advances and treatments.

Walkers make their way through the streets of Boston during last year's Making Strides walk.

Of those 4,400 people diagnosed (in Massachusetts) with the disease, 1,000 of them will die, according to Lana Lessem, the Making Strides walk manager for the ACS. "But I think progress is being made on the disease, and I definitely think people are more aware of early detection and other prevention methods."

Lessem went on to say that since 1991 Massachusetts breast cancer deaths have declined by 21 percent. "And what people don't realize that often is the fact that if breast cancer is diagnosed early, there is a 96 percent survival rate. Awareness is tremendous in Massachusetts though. While we don't have a cure, the best thing to do is promote early detection."

Langstone said there are a number of promising medicinal trials going on in the Boston medical community.

"There's so many drugs we could talk about under research," she said, citing breakthrough breast cancer drugs like Tamoxifin and Raloxifene. "One day, we're going to beat this disease."

And the Making Strides walk plays a big part in the big picture.

"The number of people that come out for the walk reflects the fact that people are learning not to ignore this anymore," Lessem said. "We're going to beat it — it's just a matter of time."

It's hard to put into words what the support from the walk means to woman who are fighting the disease.

"The support of the walkers as well as the people who donate money means a great deal to me," said Betsy Barlow Cunningham, a breast cancer survivor from Norwell. "The walk really provides the funding for research and education we need."

Weymouth resident Penny Johnson, also a breast cancer survivor, said she has been walking in the Making Strides event for the past six years.

But qualifies for state tourney in an encouraging week

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Cohasset and Hanover both entered Friday's showdown unbeaten. Obviously, only one could emerge with that mark intact. Unfortunately, that honor went to Hanover, with a 2-1 victory.

The Lady Skippers fell in the showdown that truly lived up to its hype. And though they were beaten, they were far from bowed.

"I told the girls that if they were gong to lose to anybody this year, it would probably be Hanover," confided Cohasset coach Debbie Bostwick after the game. "There's no shame in losing this game. Hanover is a great team and we played them to a standstill."

Indeed they did.

Cohasset maintained a territorial edge throughout much of the contest, including the majority of the second half, as attested to by the 11-7 shot advantage for the Skippers.

The difference was that the Lady Indians were able to capitalize on their opportunities, while the visiting Skippers let one chance after another slip through their collective fingers.

The game was into its 22nd minute when Hanover finally broke the ice and cashed in on a corner shot. Sophomore Carolyn King was able to get a piece of a hard drive across the goal box from star midfielder Marissa Hourihan to deflect it past Cohasset keeper Krysten Considine.

Cohasset picked up the intensity after the halftime break, but couldn't get one past Hanover goalie Lisa Bellantoni. Again, they wound up paying for those lost opportunities, as the hosts added the back breaker with just eight minutes remaining in the match when sophomore Michelle Long was able to finish a nice Hanover drive.

Rather than hanging their heads at that point, the Lady Skippers made their coach extremely proud by seemingly re-doubling what was already a high degree of intensity.

"I think we kept the ball in their zone for the entire eight minutes after they scored their second goal," reported Boistwick. "The girls really showed what they were made of."

Cohasset's Andi Shaugnessy finally broke through the Bellatoni barrier with only two minutes remaining on the game clock on a nice pass from Sarah Kidder. The Indians had their hands full for the remaining

Win streak stopped cold by Carver

A spirited start doesn't hold up, as powerhouse Crusaders cruise, 29-6

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

Cohasset High School, with under 300 students grades nine through twelve, battled it out on Friday afternoon with counterparts from Carver High, a school that probably had about that number tryout for their football team.

And in this extreme test for the Skippers, unbeaten up to this point, David was unable to top Goliath. As expected the Crusaders rolled, 29-6.

Nevertheless, Cohasset head coach Tony Rolfe admired the tenacious play of his squad.

"I don't think anyone played poorly," reported Rolfe of his Skippers, now 3-1 on the season. "Everyone played very well."

In the second quarter, down 7-0, Cohasset's senior captain running back Brian Krupczak ran for his team leading fifth touchdown of the year. His 62-yard scamper brought the Skippers to within one point heading into halftime.

Carver, a heavy favorite in the league, had never even had a close game until this one, having scored a combined 48 points in the first half of their first two games.

"We hung in there for a while," noted Rolfe. "We held on for a half, but we couldn't hang on for forty minutes."

Carver was able to run the ball very effectively, amassing over 300 yards rushing split among three explosive running backs.

"They were big and fast, and had pretty nice moves," complimented Rolfe. "And they hurt us on defense, too." Krupczak was Cohasset's main offensive threat, collecting 111 yards on 18 carries.

"I thought Brian had a great game," effused the Skippers' third year head coach. "He was very consistent."

Girls Soccer team heads into big week

With four games on tap, Lady Skippers hope to make up ground

By Lou Molinari
CORRESPONDENT

If members of the Cohasset High girls soccer team ate one too many pancakes at Sunday's pancake breakfast, they will certainly work it off this week.

The Skippers have four games scheduled this week, tapped off by a Saturday afternoon trip to Mashpee.

.In contrast, Cohasset played just one game last week, losing to Abington, 4-0.

Sunday's pancake breakfast was sponsored by the Cohasset Boosters Club, bringing in a total of $5,000 according to coach Deb Beal.

According to Coach Beal, members of the boys and girls soccer teams were presented with new warm-up jackets.

But getting back to this week's schedule. Beal feels confident that her 1-4-1 team should be able to improve their standing with four league games on the slate.

"The games all look winnable," said the coach. "I plan to make a couple of changes in midfield, and then go from there."

As for last week's loss, all coach Beal would say was "It was not our best performance. The kids just weren't up to it, for some reason."

This week, the heavy schedule of games start on Tuesday, with Cohasset at Ursuline Academy in Dedham. On Wednesday, Cohasset takes a little breather and plays host to Norton.

Things pick up again on Friday when Cohasset travels to Norwell for a 5 p.m. game.

After the three games, the Cohasset girls will board a bus on Saturday for the long trip to Mashpee. The noon game is also homecoming for Mashpee.

Later this season, the Lady Skippers will make another visit to the Cape, this one on a Friday afternoon to Chatham.

While talking to coach Beal, it was quite obvious she would rather

Local athlete named to Special Olympics Team USA

Cohasset's Jessica MacDonald has been selected to represent Massachusetts and Team USA at the Special Olympics Winter World Games in Anchorage Alaska being held March 4-11, 2001.

Jessica will be competing in alpine skiing. In all, twenty-five athletes from Massachusetts will travel to the, games.

The Special Olympics Winter World Games will be the largest international sporting event in Alaskan history and will bring approximately 2,750 athletes and coaches from 80 nations to compete in seven different official winter sports. The sports include figure and speed skating, alpine and cross-country skiing, snowboarding, snowshoeing and floor hockey. Teams outside of North America will begin arriving in Anchorage February 28, 2001, to allow for added recovery time prior to competition for those traveling long distances.

Jessica MacDonald will compete in Alpine Skiing in the upcoming Special Olympics Winter World Games in Anchorage, Alaska.

Cellular One, part of the SBC Global Network is making the trip to Alaska possible for all athletes and coaches by sponsoring the team. Cellular One is giving customers a free cellular phone in return for a twenty-dollar donation to Special Olympics. Nationwide, SBC has pledged to raise $40 million for Special Olympics in four years.

Special Olympics is an international year-round program which provides year sports training and athletic competition for children and adults with mental retardation or other handicaps in 25 Olympic-style sports in over 150 countries around the world.

120 or so ticks off the clock, and they breathed a collective sigh of relief when the final whistle sounded.

"I thought we outplayed them in a lot of ways," Bostwick appraised. "We made a few more mental errors than them and didn't capitalize on our corners as well as we should have, but in all other areas I thought we were at least as good as them."

Needless to say, the Lady Skippers are looking forward to the rematch on their home field on Oct. 17.

"Our goal is not to lose another game the rest of the way, and that includes against Hanover," said Bostwick, matter-of-factly.

So far so good.

The girls won 3-0 on Middleboro on Monday, paced by a pair of first half goals. Abbey Coakley got the Skippers on the board first, driving home a nice setup pass by Kelly Lordan off of a corner shot. Shaugnessy provided the cushion two-thirds of the way through the period on a deflection of a Sarah Kidder drive.

With the two goal bulge, Cohasset went into defensive mode in the second half to shut down the host Sachems and give Constantine her fourth shutout of the year. Heather Peraino added a third goal late off a nice corner pass by Kidder to put the game away.

Needing only one point to assure a .500 record on the season, and thus qualify for the post-season, the Lady Skippers got that point on Tuesday with a hardfought 1-1 tie versus Notre Dame.

Cohasset dominated the game in all areas but one: putting the ball across the goal line. Notre Dame goalie Katie D'Amvre was "simply phenomenal" in net, according to Bostwick, stopping 10 of the 11 shots she faced and turning away several other Skipper opportunities.

The Aces were able to manage just two shots in the game, but they managed to cash in on their final one late in the second half on a nice breakaway that was finished off on a deflection by Taylor Strecker to give them a 1-0 lead late in the second half.

Fortunately, Cohasset was able to notch the equalizer with just over five minutes remaining when Peraino knocked home a nifty setup off of a corner shot from Lordan.

Cohasset senior Maggie O'Conner has been one of several stalwarts through the first half of the season for the Lady Skippers.

Bostwick was delighted with the way her girls battled back for the tie, but even more impressed with their dissatisfaction over the tie.

"I like the fact that the girls were annoyed with themselves after the game, even though they'd qualified for the tournament," said the coach. "That shows that they're not going to settle for anything but the best, and that's just the kind of attitude you want them to have going into the tourney."

"We're coming together as a team," she added. "Everyone is contributing and everyone on this team picks one another up."

Humarock Fun Run set for Sunday

THE EXTRA MILE

WITH JOE REARDON

Runners looking for a scenic course and a race for a good cause should head on down to the Humarock Fun Run this Sunday, Oct. 8. The 4.6-mile race, which kicks off at 9 a.m., begins on Central Ave. at the Nautical Mile Restaurant and follows a straight, flat route through Humarock and along the South River.

Proceeds from the race will benefit the Boston Neurosurgical Foundation out of Brigham and Women's Hospital, and Sally Miller. Miller, a Humarock merchant, was diagnosed with brain cancer. Her doctor and several nurses from Brigham and Women's will be competing on Sunday. Race director Gene Lydon said he has a "goal" of 225 runners and walkers participating this year after 105 took in the event in 1999. Entry fee for the race is $15 through Saturday and $20 on race day. Long-sleeved T-shirts will be available to the first 100 registrants and refreshments will follow at the Nautical Mile Restaurant. A pre-race carbo-loading dinner will be held on Saturday night at 6 p.m. The cost is $5. For more information, call Gene Lydon at (781) 834-0276 or e-mail humbia@aol.com.

Running Notes

Jake Mahoney and Holly Madden, both of Scituate, have been on a tear since the start of the year. Mahoney, who has been a fixture on the roads for a number of years, has won his 50-59 age division six times and placed in the top three 11 times overall. Madden has been the top-female finisher five times, the most recent coming in last Sunday's T.K. O'Malley's 10K in Scituate. Mahoney won the 50-59 age division in the same race

SPORTS NOTES

Cohasset Girls Basketball Sign-up

6th grade, 7th grade, and 8th grade girls may try-out for the Cohasset Traveling Teams. There will be three teams.

The teams wear official Cohasset uniforms, learn high school drills and plays and compete in the multi-town Old Colony League. The teams are tutored by Ellen Carr, Head coach of the Cohasset High School Varsity and Junior Varsity Teams.

Last year our 6th grade team fought from fourth place regular season finish to win the championship. The beat previously unbeaten Braintree in an outstanding game by both teams. All three teams played hard all year long.

Most importantly, all teams gained valuable competitive playing time and learned high school skills and plays.

The teams practice evenings during the week and play games on the weekends, typically home games (at the high school) on Sundays and away games on Saturdays.

For try-out times and more information, call League Coordinator, Dan Belz at 383-0813.

Steady improvement the key for boys

Soccer team staying with league powers

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

The Cohasset boys soccer team has started off the year with three wins and three losses, and it only appears that they will be getting better.

First year coach Dave Nigro is pleased with the effort he has seen thus far in the young season.

"We're doing pretty good," said Nigro. "The kids have been very receptive to what I've been trying to teach them."

Recently, the Skippers powered past rival Hull 4-0, with senior goalie Nick Pestone recording the shutout. The win solidified the team's standing as one of the tougher teams in the division.

"It's a big rivalry for the kids," reported Nigro, a native of Hull. "I knew a lot of the kids [on Hull]."

Cohasset lost to Abington in their last game, 4-2, with sophomore Greg O'Connell and senior captain Doug O'Brien scoring for the Skippers.

"I think we were a little overconfident," declared Nigro. "We had a few wins in a row, and we just went away from what we had been doing."

This team, losing only three seniors to graduation last year, has many veterans with winning experience after last year's trip to the state semifinal match.

Cohasset's Doug O'Brien (foreground) prepares to drive one in last week's win over Carver.

"We have a lot of seniors on the team, a good junior class, and a good sophomore class," noted Nigro.

Of the seniors, the captains are forward O'Brien and sweeper Shea, mainstays at the opposite ends of the field.

In addition to the considerable talent both players bring to the field, it is the intangibles that make them invaluable to the squad.

"They have been excellent," Nigro raved, "both leadership-wise and example wise."

Goalkeeper Pestone and defenseman Heath Heinze are the other seniors in the starting lineup.

"Heath has played almost every minute of every game," said the coach.

At the top of the junior class are forwards Matt Bilodeau and Tim Baird, both excellent scoring threats. Sophomore O'Connell has also helped lead the attacking charge, as has the only freshman on the squad, Chris Clarke.

Apart from the accomplished starters, Nigro also has the option to take a number of talented players off the bench, such as seniors Casey Brewer and Ted Gledhill.

"We have a bunch of seniors to bring off the bench," affirmed Nigro, accustomed to having a team with depth after coaching club teams in the Massachusetts Premiere League, also known as the MAPLE League.

With three games this week, the Skippers could make a very serious run at the post-season.

"We'd better," voiced Nigro of making the playoffs. "I expect to."

Cohasset faces Norton on Wednesday, have Norwell on Friday and play in Mashpee Saturday morning.

The first year head coach knows there is no secret formula or brilliant game plan that will help him against the meat of their schedule. In fact, he minces few words when asked about what his team needs to be successful.

"Hopefully we can just keep getting better," stated Nigro.

Sometimes the simplest solution is the best.

see her team playing teams like Holbrook or Scituate, rather than make the long and exhausting trips to the Cape, especially the Friday afternoon journey.

Cohasset's lone win this season has been against Hull.

In the Abington game it was actually a freshman that did the Cohasset team in. Val Jarvis scored two goals to lead Abington to the SSL win.

The other two goals were scored by Katie Abbatangelo and Kasey LaPointe.

The Green Wave's Brittany Cheney made five saves and recorded her second shutout of the season. As for the upcoming week and its tough schedule, Coach Beal has been getting the team ready.

"We have held several practice sessions as we try to regroup ," she reported. "I know the kids can play a lot better than that, it's just a case of trying to work out the right combinations."

To that end, Beal noted that she has her eye on a couple of kids from the junior varsity that may be seeing varsity action before the week is over.

"There are a couple of players on the jayvees that have been coming along very well, and look as though they might be able to help."

Win streak stopped cold by Carver as hard as they were able against Carver's ferocious ground attack. Senior linebacker Ronan Buick led the way with 11 tackles, with Krupczak and senior Justin Langham adding 10 and nine, respectively. Sophomores Cosimo Cambi and Ben Lynner each had seven.

One main reason Cohasset found themselves unable to compete in the second half was the slew of injuries to starters. Junior nose tackle Pat Carbone and Tom Anderson have both missed the last two games.

And in this contest, junior Nick Bolster—#1 punter, punt returner, kickoff returner, wide receiver and cornerback— went down in the third quarter with what appeared to be a knee injury.

"We really need Nick on kickoff returns," said Rolfe. "He is definitely one of our key players."

Fortunately, Bolster appears as if he will be ready for this week's game at Abington.

"We could have even put him in again against Carver," said Rolfe. The coach ruled out that option, however, as the game was all but out of reach at the time he went down.

"We hung in there for a while. We held on for a half, but we couldn't hang on for forty minutes."

Cohasset head football coach Tony Rolfe

Cohasset now looks ahead to Abington, where winning would appear to be a much more realistic goal than it was last week.

"I was pleased with the overall effort [against Carver]," said Rolfe. "If we can continue to play at this level, it should be a great game."

Cohasset halfback Brian Krupczak was a force again on Friday with 111 yards on 18 carries, including a 62-yard touchdown run. Unfortunately, the effort went for naught, as the Skippers fell to the powerhouse Carver team.

Game Notes

-The real reason why the Skippers lost has officially been discovered: Apparently, the winning karma had left the New England area, and traveled to Denver to allow the struggling Patriots their first win in Mile High Stadium since 1968.

- Three different Crusader's all rushed for at least one touchdown: JT Eakins, Jim Nivens, and Chris Villanueva.

- As if Bolster did not play enough positions already, he played running back for one play, collecting 12 yards on a reverse.

-Eakins was the Carver version of Bolster, serving as running back, punter, punt returner, kicker, and linebacker.

- There were a total of four penalties in this game, three called against Carver.

- Through four games, junior quarterback Jason Brown has yet to throw an interception.

- Carver attempted a trick play in the second quarter, pitching to the running back who threw downfield. The pass fell away incomplete.

- Neither team completed a pass all game.

SCHOOL'S IN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

Hello to all families, staff members and anyone else who is interested in what goes on in the schools! This column, "Schools In" and page is dedicated to bring the news and current happenings to you each week and to let you know of all the wonderful and positive things going on within our schools. The guidelines for this page are easy, all news, leads that you may have for a story or interview, pictures of an event that may have happened and any other great school-related info should be to me no later than Monday at noon. Email me at jenpiep@yahoo.com, send to me at 622 CJC Highway or call and leave a message at (781)-923-1057.

I am very excited to have this opportunity to extend the communication from the schools to all families and interested residents in town.

The Fall PSO fundraiser is coming to a close. All gift wrap orders were due on Oct. 2. If anyone still has an order form, please send it to school with your child. This is a wonderful fundraiser to start the year with and we want to thank all the students and families for all the hard work you put into it and also, thank everyone who placed an order. You may still order of the website at www.innisbrook.com and enter the following school code: #105210 for Cohasset to receive the proper credits.

The First Graders went on a wonderful trip to the Drumlin Farm last Friday. A wonderful time was had by all, students, staff and chaperones alike! As one child said, "this was the best day of school I ever had!"

There are several upcoming events to look forward to in the next few weeks. The Deer Hill Book Fair will be held on Oct. 17, 18 & 19. This is a wonderful way to purchase books and gift items for your family as well as help to raise money for the school. More info will be coming in next week's column.

The Annual Fall METCO dinner for all school and community families will be held on Sunday, Nov. 5. Please contact Olivia Baldwin, 383-1866 or Allison Moskow, 383-9242 with questions or interest in the METCO program. Host Families are needed for students. in grades one-to-10 and is a rewarding and wonderful experience. All current host families please plan on the following half days, Oct. 12 & 19.

Now that school is underway, please take some time to remind your child about ways to show respect and good behavior in school and on the busses. For safety reasons, the school bus rules must be followed and adhered to at all times. All school staff and drivers are following the appropriate guidelines for behavior issues and we as parents need to support and this in all areas. Please make sure to read the handbooks and memos that come home each week and take the time to talk to your child about it. Also, for those of us who drive our children to and from school for whatever reasons, we need to follow the guidelines put into place for this. Make sure to follow speed limits that are posted, stay in the lines as they form and don't stop your cars and get out while you are in the line as it backs it up for everyone else. At the Osgood school, the staff members are in place to help keep the lines running safely and smooth, please don't criticize them or get angry if you have to wait. No child will be released from the cafeteria unless it is safe to do so. We all make the choice to drive for whatever the reasons, and if this is the case with you, sometimes you will have to wait. At all schools, the drop off/pick up policies are stated in handbooks and weekly memos, if you have any questions please call the appropriate school.

I am really excited, as I said before about the start of this column and page. As it gets rolling, questions and comments can be made in the same way that news is sent in. E-Mail, jenpiep@yahoo.com, 622 CJC Highway or (781)-923-1057. Have a great week!

wedding anniversary at a hall in Plymouth, they were first approached about teaching a class of seniors. They now teach classes in Plymouth and Middleboro, in addition to Cohasset. Later this month they will begin a class in Marshfield.

Both Shermans think the constant dancing keeps them limber despite not being 18 any more.

Ruth Kelley likes it for that reason. "I like it because it's a different type of exercise," said the Scituate resident. "I like to respond to music."

Last Thursday's class was the first for Louise Smullen, of North Main Street in Cohasset. She quickly distinguished herself as one of the more enthusiastic participants. Smullen said later she just tried to put herself into the lesson — something she had wanted to do for a long time. "I need the exercise and always wanted to learn dance, but never had the chance," she said trying to catch her breath 10 minutes after the class ended, though with a smile on her face.

The lessons, every Thursday afternoon from 1:30 to 2:30, cost $3, and Howard said he welcomes all seniors.

"We're going good, but slowly," he said. Call 383-9112 for more information.

Community project grants available

Oct. 16 application deadline approaching

The Cohasset Cultural Council has received a $3,300 grant from the Massachusetts Cultural Council and has set an Oct. 16 deadline for applications to support community projects and PASS, a ticket subsidy program for school-age children. Eligible projects must take place in 2001.

The Mass Cultural Council is a state agency that supports public programs in the arts, sciences, and humanities. This year, it will distribute $3.9 million to 335 Local Cultural Councils statewide.

Individuals and organizations may apply for general support — projects such as workshops, lectures, exhibits, festivals, science education and artist projects — or for PASS funding to enable schools and youth groups to take students, Pre-K through Grade 12, to cultural programs outside of school. Grants are awarded after considering the benefit to the community, the qualifications of the individuals and organizations involved, the planning process, community interest and involvement, and the population segments served.

Applications and detailed guidelines are available at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library or on-line at www.massculturalcouncil.org/applications/lccapp.html.

The Cohasset Cultural Council awards grants in the range of $100-$500. For fiscal year 2000, the council received requests for more than $12,000 in funding and funded 15 projects, including the South Shore Art Center's Festival on the Common, the Choral Arts Society, a performance of the Ha' Penny Theater at the South Shore Community Center, as well as many enrichment programs at the schools. A complete list of the funding for projects in 2000 is available by contacting the cultural council at cohasset@mass-culture.org or (781) 383-1304.

Old Ship labyrinth available to public

The Old Ship Labyrinth is now available for use by the public on the second Tuesday evening of each month from 7:30 to 9 p.m. Admission is free and all are invited to attend individually, with companions, or in groups. The labyrinth is located in the Old Ship Fellowship Hall across from the church at the rear of the Parish House, 107 Main St. in downtown Hingham.

The process of "walking the labyrinth" on a Tuesday evening is meant to be an individual meditative experience. There will be no religious services on Tuesday evenings although there will be contemplative musical background to accompany the walks.

How do you walk a labyrinth? One begins at the entrance on the perimeter of the labyrinth following a path to the center, then retracing the winding path to the entrance. How quickly or in what spirit one walks and what one experiences during the walk differs with each walk and each person. Some walks may evoke a sense of healing or oneness. Others may simply be pleasant, relaxing walks.

At Old Ship the labyrinth is patterned into a terrazzo floor; the design is based on the labyrinth constructed in the 13th century French Cathedral of Chartres as part of the tradition of religious pilgrimage. Though that context was of course Christian, labyrinths of other designs can be found in many traditions. Walking a labyrinth, therefore, can be understood as a path of contemplation or prayer for people seeking the divine or seeking peace without regard to any particular religious tradition.

For more information, call the Old Ship Parish assistant or the Rev. Ken Read-Brown at (781) 749-1679.

Scout renovates church room as Eagle project

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Four members of Boy Scout Troop 28 in Cohasset are nearing completion of requirements for their Eagle Scout badges — a feat remarkable in itself, but made even more special because of the troop's small size. As part of their requirements for the badge, each scout must get his project publicized. This is the second of a four-part series featuring these scouts and their projects.

For his Eagle Scout project, Ken Portanova went to church and fixed part of it up.

Ken renovated three rooms at St. Bernadette's CYO building in Randolph, and recently submitted his final project book to the area Boy Scout Council for approval.

"I should know in a couple of weeks," said Ken, a senior at Cohasset High School.

He finished the project nearly three years ago, but because he moved to Cohasset from Randolph at that time, he had to get organized within Cohasset's Troop 28 before he could officially finish the project book, a necessary step on the road to Eagle Scout rank.

Eagle Scout status — the highest rank a Boy Scout can achieve — is bestowed upon young men who have earned 21 merit badges and successfully fulfilled a service project for a religious institution, school or community. Only two percent of all scouts achieve the Eagle rank because the requirements are so strenuous.

Ken is one of four scouts in his troop currently working on his Eagle Scout project. Only one member has received an Eagle Scout award since 1996, said scoutmaster and Eagle Scout, Phil Lehr.

Merle Brown, a selectman and former scoutmaster, said the last time multiple scouts in the troop were working on Eagle Scout projects simultaneously was more than ten years ago.

Ken, who grew up in Randolph, said his initial Boy Scout meetings were held at St. Bernadette's. When he had to come up with an Eagle Scout project, he remembered the condition of the meeting area and its bathroom and kitchen. He proposed the idea of fixing the area up to the church. "The priest thought it was a great idea," he said.

As part of the badge requirements, Ken must plan the project, organize a team of volunteers, including other scouts, raise the money and see the project through to completion.

"The project has to be at least 50 hours of work," Brown said. "But some can include up to 300, 400, 500 hours [of work]. Their role in an Eagle Scout project is not just to do it, but to show leadership, get other scouts to help out, do fundraising work, work with not only parents, but adults."

Ken sent letters out to Glidden Paint and Sherman Williams asking for donations of paint and recruited a small army of volunteers to help him.

"Everybody in my family [helped out]," he said. "My sisters, mother, grandparents. A lot of the Boy Scouts helped out too."

A family friend volunteered to buff the floors. After 280 volunteer hours, the hall had freshly painted walls, support poles and ceilings, new curtains, ceiling tiles, countertops, refrigerator, toilets and cabinets.

The work, which Ken started in November 1997, was finished last December.

Once the physical work is done, according to Lehr, the scout must complete a workbook and bring it before the local Boy Scout council. "It includes ranks, letters of recommendations from his family or church or local leaders saying they deserve the Eagle Scout rank. [They have got to have] pictures of the project, different functions they've attended over the years, such as scout camp. It's quite a feat to put this book together."

Ken said he was inactive for about six months after he moved to Cohasset in 1998. When he joined Troop 28, he began the process of putting together the detailed project book.

Though Ken will be the assistant captain of this year's CHS hockey team, he has been able to maintain the balance between, school, Scouts and extracurricular activities.

"I've always been active in Boys Scouts. My father was one of the leaders," he said. "I've always enjoyed it. I've been taught a lot of values and morals that have helped along the way.

Since Troop 28 was established, 63 Cohasset boys have been awarded Eagle Scout rank. All of their names are listed at the Pilgrim Cooperative Bank on South Main Street.

D&A Committee puts final touches on handbook

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

In an effort to give parents another weapon in the battle to keep their kids alcohol and drug free, the Cohasset Drug & Alcohol Committee is putting the finishing touches on its official drug and alcohol handbook.

"There's a [newspaper] article over the summer that talked about parental example being the best for of guidance," said committee chairman Rev. Cliff Cutler. "Part of the purpose of the handbook is to help parents as a guide for teenage children."

The handbook, according to Cutler, has been "on the table for a long time" and is now in a working draft. According to Derry Schwantner, who has been overseeing the book's production, said "what started out as a brochure six months ago, has taken on a life of its own," and is now pushing 120 pages.

Schwantner hopes the book becomes and educational guide for Cohasset parents and other communities also looking to educate. "The committee's hope is to accomplish two things. The first is to allow parents and their children better ways to help avoid the tragic consequences of abusing alcohol and drugs," she said. "The second is to have our book serve as a model for use by neighboring towns."

Contained in its pages is information on alcohol and its short and long term effects, and drugs. The drugs section is broken down into classifications such as "inhalants," "club drugs," and "hallucinogens," and lists the different street names of the drugs and their effects.

It also contains facts that might surprise people, such as "80 percent of teens say it is very easy to fairly easy to buy alcohol" or "10 percent of all senior high school males have tried anabolic steroids."

> "This book has information on alcohol and drugs that are currently out there destroying families and claiming lives."
> — Derry Schwantner

"This book has information on alcohol and drugs that are currently out there destroying families and claiming lives," Schwantner said. "We give details on the long and short term effects of each drugs and the horrible dangers of drugs such as inhalants and club drugs. We also offer help lines and web sites for even more information."

Cutler said the booklet was created on the heels of the former Safe Homes program, which was a pamphlet listing the names of parents who were committed to providing alcohol and drug free houses in town. When the program started to falter, Cutler said current school committee chairman Pat Martin helped combine the idea of a Safe Homes list and a general educational hand guide, similar to one she had created in New Jersey.

Though the idea took a while to come to fruition, Cuitler said that was a good thing because it allowed the committee time to raise the proper funds and come up with a good design. The committee organized a car show fund-raiser a few years ago, and also would raise money through collecting Christmas trees in town. "We now have enough to put together a really nice drug and alcohol handbook," said Cutler.

At the group's last meeting in September, Schwantner presented a draft of the informational portion of the book, which was received warmly by the group. She said in October the committee will photograph some Cohasset residents to include in the book. If all goes well, Schwantner sees a January, 2001 release date.

For Cutler, the book comes at a good time for Cohasset. In August, a study named Massachusetts as having a one of the highest drug and alcohol abuse rates in the nation, and traditionally, said Cutler, the behavioral risk surveys given to Cohasset High School students have shown Cohasset students to be comparable to the rest of the state. "We're no worse than anywhere else, but we're no better either," he said. "If Cohasset is no different, than we have to say there is a real need for drug and alcohol issues to be addressed."

Russian organist at St. Stephen's

As part of its Sunday Concert Series, now in its 10th year, St. Stephen's Church presents Russian organist, Tatiana Tchausova in a recital on Sunday, Oct. 29, at 1 p.m. Tchausova was born in the city of Dnepropetrovsk, a large cultural center in the Ukraine. She is now a professor at the St. Petersburg Conservatory, specializing in organ and musicology, and combines teaching and performing, having performed in Russia, the Baltic countries, Finland, and France.

Included in this concert will be selections of Russian organ music, as well as music of Cesar Franck, on whom Tchausova has done extensive research and dissertation work. This visit is particularly meaningful for St. Stephen's, since through the years, the church's music director, Dr. Fred Guzasky, has gone to St. Petersburg to teach at the conservatory and play recitals; and now, Tchausova, long-time colleague and friend, is coming to the Boston area for a series of recitals, including one at St. Pauls' Cathedral downtown. She is also planning an organ workshop and will be speaking about musical life in Russia. Call the information number concerning these important events.

The church is located at 16 Highland Ave. in. Cohasset, with parking available at the village lot near the church and is handicap accessible. Donations will be accepted, and a reception will follow the program For more information, call (781) 383-1083.

Officer Christy Tarantino, at right, investigates a head-on collision on Rte. 3A last Thursday.

Head-on crash on Rte. 3A

Two young women were injured in a head-on collision on Rte. 3A at about 12:30 p.m. last Thursday. Nicole M. Sullivan, 20, of Weymouth was traveling northbound near Jonathan Livingston Seagull Square when she apparently didn't see the back up in traffic and swerved into the southbound lane, police said. Traffic was backed up due to construction near the entrance to the Rose Hill subdivision. Sullivan's 1985 Mercury sedan crashed head on into the 1992 Nissan sedan driven by Christine O'Hara, 17, of Braintree.

Sullivan was taken by MedFlight helicopter to Massachusetts General Hospital where she was treated and released the following day, Sgt. Robert Jackson said. O'Hara was taken by Hull ambulance to South Shore Hospital.

Sullivan was cited for failure to stay within marked lane; failure to take care stopping and starting; and operating a motor vehicle with a failed safety inspection sticker.

Police cited O'Hara for operating a motor vehicle without a valid license.

Traffic was diverted onto Sohier and Lower King streets for about an hour following the accident.

Wompatuck to expand by 125 acres

More opportunities for nature lovers

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

Walkers, hikers, bicyclists and naturalists will soon have more places to visit at Wompatuck State Park.

That's due to the fact that the adjoining 125-acre former ammunition depot site located at the end of Leavitt Street will soon be cleaned up, paving the way for the property to become part of the state park system. The Army now controls the parcel.

This comes as welcome news to the town.

Town administrator Charles Cristello has worked with the United States Army Corps of Engineers, National Guard (which assisted with the demolition process), department of environmental management (DEM), state environmental officials and Sen. Robert Hedlund (R-Weymouth) to bring about an environmental clean-up and perform work related to safety issues.

The clean-up process has been a long and arduous one spanning eight years, involving tearing down large, dilapidated transportation, production, vehicle maintenance and warehouse buildings still standing on the property and the removal of asbestos, underground storage tanks and contaminated soil. Some of the buildings have three-foot thick concrete walls.

Now all that stands in the way of transferring the property to park use is the removal of a number of remaining structures, steel frames and demolition materials and ensuring the environmental clean-up is complete. A private contractor will get rid of the steel frames, and some of the demolition debris will be used to fill a bunker in Bare Cove Park, which is currently considered unsafe.

State Sen. Robert Hedlund, left, and Hingham town administrator Charles Cristello tour the old transfer building soon to be razed at the former Annex property.

DEM commissioner Peter C. Webber decided to make the job easier recently by committing an amount not to exceed $300,000 for demolition of remaining structures which the department says need to be removed. The expenditure would be subject to the Army Corps of Engineers completing the environmental cleanup at the site in accordance with all department of environmental protection requirements and the satisfactory completion of any remaining items on the "punch list" of safety issues submitted by DEM to the Army Corps this past April.

Monitoring wells are still evident on the property to detect any remaining contaminated soil.

"These are the last things that need to be done to make the park usable and safe for visitors," Cristello said.

A few skeletons of buildings, ones that don't pose a safety hazard, may remain standing.

In fact, Cristello would like to see one of the brick buildings — "which tell a story" — cleaned up and preserved, with some form of interpretation provided to tell visitors about the history of the property.

According to Hedlund, those involved in the clean-up have come up with creative ways to complete the work.

"Now the last remaining portion of the necessary funds is in place," Hedlund said. "By the first of the year I expect the clean-up will be completed, which will open up a little new territory for bikers and hikers."

In the meantime, a fence keeps out the curious until the clean-up is finished.

Although there's still work to do, it's clear what the area will eventually offer. The addition of more than 100 acres of open space to the town will be welcomed by many. Even now, tree branches poke through holes in the walls of decaying buildings, evergreen and other trees are in abundance, crickets "peep," birds sing and wildflowers sprout up through the floor and amid the rubble in some of the structures.

A number of years ago, Hingham was designated the local redevelopment authority for the property. Consequently, the selectmen were charged with coming up with a redevelopment plan under the federal base closure project.

After considering various options for the former Hingham Annex, including Habitat for Humanity housing, an elder-care facility and an aviation museum, the town decided the best use of the land was to integrate it into the existing 3,000-acre state park.

The town also rejected a proposal from Hingham Municipal Light Plant to expand its facilities onto Annex property due in part to traffic concerns.

Significant wetlands, ledge and distance from public utilities and the rest of the town precludes using the land for many other purposes. Besides, the narrow road could not easily accommodate a large increase in traffic volume.

Federal law also required selectmen to consider a potential shelter for the homeless in their reuse analysis.

The town received only one notice of interest as the result of its outreach efforts to homeless assistance providers, and that was from Habitat for Humanity.

An Army draft environmental assessment provided active and passive use plans, including playing fields. However, the property's limitations made those proposals difficult to implement.

The transfer of the Annex property to the existing state park would provide a solid link between the watershed lands of both Hingham and Cohasset, Whitney Woods (maintained by the Trustees of Reservations) and Wompatuck State Park, creating a 5,000-acre contiguous block of quality recreational space.

"If the state had walked away (from being involved), the Army might have sold the property," Cristello said. "It would have been a shame to lose these 125 acres."

According to the reuse plan, the expansion of the park would have the least impact on the Leavitt Street neighborhood. The existing road network will support a number of recreational uses, including biking, rollerblading, walking and running.

Once the property officially becomes part of Wompatuck, a bus turnaround will be created at the end of Leavitt Street, which has been a subject of discussion over the years.

In the meantime, Hedlund is looking forward to a "fence-cutting ceremony" once the Annex becomes part of the state park.

"It's amazing how Mother Nature can reclaim a site like this," he noted.

During World War II, the base was used to manufacture and store ammunition. The Army also used the property as a training facility and a place to repair vehicles. There was also activity there during the Korean and Vietnam conflicts.

The Annex was part of a 3,700-acre Navy-owned parcel of land which the federal government declared surplus and began turning over to the state in the early 1960s. Most of the property has become part of Wompatuck State Park.

Painting from the heart

Irish landscapes serve as inspiration for Cohasset artist

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

She is a 74-year-old woman with a passion for painting, and she's got her own show to prove it.

Cohasset watercolorist Pat O'Neill will be displaying 22 of her finest watercolor paintings through the end of October at the South Shore Conservatory Staircase Gallery in Hingham.

"Painting with watercolors is fascinating and fun—and frustrating and fulfilling all at the same time. Painting landscapes is an adventure that can take you anywhere. When the muse is upon you, you have the world in your hands as well as your paintbrush."

Cohasset artist Pat O'Neill

"It looks quite nice," O'Neill said of the exhibit. The show She added the show was slated to begin Sept. 1 but because of what she called "an unexpected delay" in her life, the show was postponed until the middle of the month.

"My life had a little blip," she said, "but it didn't get me off track that much. I had the show planned for quite a while, so I wanted to make sure it happened."

Painting is a relatively new hobby for O'Neill. She said she has only been painting for the last 15 years—she is a member of the South Shore Art Center in Cohasset, and she has studied with a number of renown local artists. Aside from her current show, O'Neill has displayed her work at the South Shore Art Center, and also at the Aisling (Irish art) Gallery in Hingham.

Irish art is an issue close to O'Neill's heart.

"My husband (Eric) is from Ireland," she said. "I travel there frequently, so a lot of my paintings, which are mostly landscapes, are inspired by that area of the world." She added at her current show, some of those her paintings of Ireland are on display along with works capturing local landscapes.

Of her love of watercolors, O'Neill says "Painting with watercolors is fascinating and fun—and frustrating and fulfilling all at the same time. Painting landscapes is an adventure that can take you anywhere. When the muse is upon you, you have the world in your hands as well

There's music on Jupiter

Hanover rocker releases third album

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

Hanover musician Kristian Montgomery has seen his share of triumphs—a nomination for a Boston Music Award in 1996, the birth of his daughter Madeline, and a continuously successful solo career.

Now, Montgomery, 27, is celebrating yet another major acheivement—the release of his third solo release called "Jupiter 1973." The album gets its title from Montgomery's first hometown, Jupiter, Fla.

"As far as my music goes, I'd say it's multi-dimensional," Montgomery said of his band's style. "We've all spent a good deal of time incorporating different musical genres into our songs. Some people have labeled us as pop musicians, and some have called our music roots rock—I just call it good old fashioned rock 'n' roll."

Since April, Montgomery and his band have been peforming shows around the region—but there were two weeks in April where the band toured in a rather exotic location.

"It's not what you play, it's how you play it. What makes music worth listening to is when the passion of the music coincides with the words of a given song. It's all about using every instrument in a band as a voice. If the music is honest, then it's great."

Hanover musician Kristian Montgomery

"At the beginning of April, we spent two weeks on tour in Nicaragua," Montgomery said. "We got off the plane, went right to the local TV station, and performed live. After that, we played on a local (Nicaraguan) radio station."

Since then, Montgomery's band has stayed closer to home, playing gigs in the Boston club scene. But according to Montgomery the band will be going abroad again come spring time.

"We're planning a six-week tour of Europe in April," Montgomery explained. "We'll be playing in places like Germany, Amsterdam, and London."

Until then, Montgomery and his band continue to promote "Jupiter 1973." Montgomery said a CD release party is slated for sometime in November, but he is unsure of the specific date and location of the event.

Montgomery has come a long way in his musical career—he's been through his share of hardships and victories, and his musical story began at a tender age.

"My first rock experience came when I was a pretty young kid," Montgomery said. "I stole my uncle Steve's Black Sabbath album and that was it. I loved the heavy sounds of bands like Led Zeppelin, Peter Gabriel, The Rolling Stones, and southern rock bands like Lynyrd Syknyrd. It's like I went right past The Beatles. I was into more obscure music."

Montgomery said as he went into his early teens, his religious upbringing played a huge

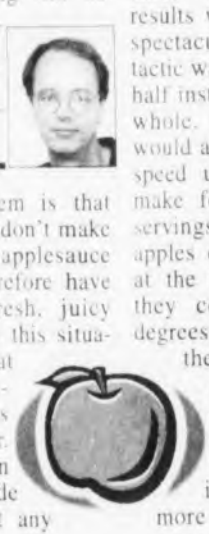
Quick-Roasted apples

A friend who is an apple grower near Saratoga Springs, New York, says that as recently as 10 years ago folks used to purchase a bushel or two of apples at a time, while these days most customers buy a small bag, just enough for eating out of hand. The problem is that most home cooks don't make pies, crisps, or applesauce anymore and therefore have little use for fresh, juicy apples. To rectify this situation, I thought that a recipe for quickly roasted apples might be in order. These apples can be served as a side dish with almost any roasted or grilled meat, and they also make a quick, healthy dessert.



THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

The problem with baked apple recipes is that they call for a moderate or low oven temperature that demands a cooking time of about 45 minutes. I soon discovered that when roasted in a hot oven, apples explode. I tried 450 degrees, 425, and then a more moderate 400, and in all three cases the results were, well, a spectacular mess. My first tactic was to cut the apples in half instead of roasting them whole. I thought that this would allow steam to escape, speed up the cooking, and make for more manageable servings. Although the halved apples continued to explode at the higher temperatures, they cooked well at 400 degrees (and most evenly on the middle oven rack), which was still hot enough to speed the cooking and had the advantage of producing apples that were more roasted than baked, with a firmer, less soggy texture.

Apples, like children, vary greatly. A roasted Macintosh is quickly transformed into a pile of sour mush, while both Golden Delicious and Gala‹the varieties recommended for this recipe‹maintained their shape while developing a tender texture. (Cortlands were grainy, Red Delicious were dry and bland, and Granny Smith were too sour.)

The next question was whether the apples should be covered during baking, and the answer was no: covered apples had a tendency to burst during roasting. I also learned that the apples were best roasted cut-side down, as this provided a more stable base and allowed the juices to mingle at the bottom of the pan. As for the type of pan, a glass pie plate or a cast-iron skillet worked better than metal or pottery.

The next issue was flavor. I found that 1/2 teaspoon butter and 1 teaspoon brown sugar per half-apple was ideal, resulting in a pleasantly sweet and thickened sauce. Because I wanted a bit more sauce to serve with the apples, I also tried cream, maple syrup, water, apple juice, cider, rum, and bourbon. The clear winner was 5 tablespoons apple cider. This added liquid also allowed me to increase the oven temperature to 425 degrees. I also found that the cider produced apples that were more evenly cooked.

QUICK-ROASTED APPLES

Try these apples not just for a quick dessert but also as an accompaniment for roasted or grilled meats such as pork, chicken, and even beef. Remember that the type and condition of the apple matter. Golden Delicious and Gala were my two favorites. Avoid overcooking the apples, which causes the skins to push up and away and the flesh to foam and turn soft.

- 1 tablespoon unsalted butter
- 2 tablespoons light or dark brown sugar
- Pinch of cinnamon (optional)
- 5 tablespoons apple cider or juice
- 3 Golden Delicious or Gala apples
- Vanilla ice cream if serving as dessert (optional)

Preheat oven to 425 degrees and adjust rack to middle position. Smear butter evenly on bottom of a deep, 9-inch glass pie dish or a 9-inch cast-iron skillet. Sprinkle the brown sugar evenly over the butter, add the optional cinnamon, and pour in the apple cider. Halve and core the apples. Place each half cut-side down in the prepared pan and roast for 17 to 20 minutes or until tender throughout when poked with a thin skewer. (Time will vary with the size, type, and condition of apples.) Let sit for 5 minutes. Remove with a spatula and serve cut side up.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 4

The planetary tug of war continues. The moon enters conservative Capricorn at 5:42 a.m. On the other hand, a 90-degree alignment of Mars and Jupiter generates an impulsive 'let's just do it' kind of mood. Channel high energy productively; tackle big work projects, plan a busy schedule. Influences rate high for new starts across the board. Sign important contracts before 8:40 p.m., when the moon forms a harmonious contact to Mercury.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 5

The first quarter phase of the moon occurs at 6:59 a.m. It serves as a reminder that a full moon is building and will culminate October 13. Initiate new activities before 8:34 a.m., when the Capricorn moon aligns with Venus and becomes inactive. The remainder of the day rates high for catching up on unfinished business, handling routine chores and errands, cleaning out and reorganizing.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 6

The moon continues inactive travel in Capricorn until 6:33 p.m. You can be productive today. However, new starts are off limits until 6:33 p.m., when the moon enters Aquarius. The period between 6:33-7:28 p.m. is particularly favorable for launching important ventures, especially regarding business, career. The remainder of the evening rates high for relaxing, partying. Forget your troubles and go for the good times.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 7

The moon travels in Aquarius throughout the weekend, making it one of the best for socializing, traveling, exploring. Keep an open mind; go with the flow. No schedules, no expectations. Put recent pressures and worries on the back burner. An applying alignment of Venus/Uranus promises an exciting, 'anything can happen' kind of evening.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 8

The Aquarius moon aligns with Uranus at 4:55 a.m. and becomes inactive for the remainder of the day. Venus forms a 90-degree contact to Uranus at 10:20 a.m. No major planetary activity occurs after that. This is a great day for vacationing. Take a break from routine and responsibility. Enjoy favorite sports, hobbies, friends. Relax and recharge your batteries.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 9

The moon enters Pisces at 6:36 a.m. A harmonious alignment of the sun and Uranus replays the theme that has been in effect this past weekend; do your thing, enjoy life to the fullest. The only potential stumbling block occurs in the early morning hours, when the moon aligns with Saturn. Wake up in a good mood. Don't let minor obstacles get you down. This influence passes over by 8:30 a.m., and the remainder of the day rates high across the board.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 10

A Pisces moon all day generates a laidback mood. There is one rough spot, however, in effect between 9:18 a.m.-12:18 p.m., when a polarity of the moon and Mars occurs. Stay alert and use common sense. You can make gains developing projects that require creativity and imagination. It is okay to initiate new activities this afternoon and evening until 9:09 p.m., when the moon becomes inactive.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 11

It may take a while for the morning fog to burn off. The moon travels at the tail end of the zodiac until 3:51 p.m. No major planetary activity occurs. Try to take extra time out for quiet relaxation, meditation. Influences turn around completely at 3:51 p.m., when the moon enters energetic Aries, and the final windup to this month's full moon begins.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 12

A full moon buildup makes this a day to get things done. Roll up your sleeves and take on a full agenda. You can be most productive, if you have a clear plan of action and stick to it. The Aries moon forms easy contacts to Pluto, Jupiter in the morning and Uranus in the evening. On the other hand, people may be irritable, impatient, argumentative. Don't rock the boat in business or romance. You can let off steam by exercising or enjoying favorite sports.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 13

The second Jupiter/Pluto opposition this year occurs at 4:24 a.m. The full moon culminates at 4:53 a.m., 20-degrees of Aries/Libra. At this time the Aries moon becomes inactive until 10:06 p.m. This is a day to follow through on projects already begun, tie up loose ends. Don't start anything new. A Taurus moon at 10:06 p.m. brings an opportunity to kick back, relax and unwind.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 14

The combination of a Taurus moon and Neptune station set the stage for a pleasant weekend. Take a vacation from business or career concerns; chill out and recharge your batteries. Seek a creative or romantic outlet for your energies. Follow your intuition; your instincts are on target. Pay attention to your dreams.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 15

The planet Neptune takes center stage today. At 10:12 a.m. Neptune begins direct travel at 4-degrees of Aquarius. Neptune's influence aids all creative projects, artistic endeavors. You can gain new insight and find fresh inspiration. The moon continues to travel in Taurus, making this day prime for relaxing and enjoying favorite friends and pastimes.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 16

The planet Mercury turns retrograde midweek. Allow extra time to get where you are going, have an alternate plan of action. There are likely to be unexpected setbacks, obstacles, breakdowns. Today the Taurus moon becomes inactive at 2:17 a.m. until 2:19 a.m., when it enters Gemini. You must carefully organize your time and stick to your plan in order to avoid spinning your wheels. Choose your words carefully between 7:13-10:13 p.m., when a polarity of the moon and Pluto occurs. Don't say more than you have to. Know when it's time to call it a night.

Performing arts makes for happy campers

Norwell educator runs Britney Spears 'arts camp'

By Liz Lawrence
LLAWRENCE@CNC.COM

During the campers final performance, Super star Britney Spears (R) joins Camp Summer Stars program Director Donna Milani-Luther (L) of Norwell. Donna is more popularly known locally for her work and dedication as head of school for The Montessorri School of Scituate.

With a natural love of the arts, and roles like Peter Pan and Eva Perone in Evita in local theatre productions on her resume, Norwell resident Donna Luther said the idea of helping children explore music, dance, and acting was right up her ally.

So when longtime friend and NFL Football star Doug Flutey approached her about becoming the project director for an arts camp for children funded through the Britney Spears Foundation , Luther said she couldn't have been more thrilled.

Luther, who is principal of the Montessori Community Day School in Scituate helped develop and run the summer camp program which took place for two weeks in August at Camp Nawaka in East Otis, Mass. "Camp Summer Stars," provided 74 children from all over the New England area and New York, ages 11-14 a chance to show and develop their various talents, said Luther.

"As an educator in the arts for almost 30 years, I believe in the power of group experiences in the arts to enable children to discover who they are and who they are becoming," said Luther.

"As an educator in the arts for almost 30 years, I believe in the power of group experiences in the arts to enable children to discover who they are and who they are becoming."

Theatre teacher, Donna Luther

Most of the program's participants had to send in an application and write an essay to qualify to attend the camp. Those that did each had the chance to sing, dance and act with the professionals, said Luther. And at the end of the program they put on a performance attended by Britney Spears herself, and their parents.

Although the camp only lasted two weeks, Luther said the children had a very rigorous schedule.

Campers were up at 7 a.m. each morning. After a half-hour of breakfast, they were already stretching and singing. Throughout the day they ran three different performances or acts, followed by a theme dinner each night. And by 9:30 p.m they were ready to hit the sack, Luther said.

Luther said the diversity of the campers and the teachers taught everyone a lot of important life lessons and about other cultures..

"We were able to chip away, at what's in our way," said Luther.

With six master teachers on hand, students had the chance to experience learning Caribbean/African music style, different instrumental music, and choreography.

Luther said she was happy to be a part of creating the program, and hopefully it would benefit more than just the children when they returned back to their homes.

"I believe in building community through work in arts," said Luther.

Here on the South Shore Luther enjoys her work at the Montessori School.. But the camp experience, she said was one she'll remember for a lifetime.

"It was one of my most significant life experiences."

According to Luther, this was the first year that teen pop star Britney Spears got involved in the camp. Hopefully it was just the beginning of the singer's participation, she said.

Luther said you could not meet a more down to earth, caring young lady, than Spears.

Britney said she started the camp to give children the a chance at the arts, and it was well worth her time and effort.

With teen singing sensation Britney Spears in the audience, the young performers give it their all.

"I am so happy to be able to give kids the opportunity to learn about the amazing world of dance and music that I've been lucky enough to make such a big part of my own life. It's exciting to think that I might help inspire a talented kid to pursue his or her dreams of becoming a performing artist," said Spears.

Other famous faces that met with campers this summer, include Daryl Hansen who starred in the movie, "Soul Food."

Hansen taught a drumming class called "And the Beat Goes On", which Luther said was a big hit with the campers. "The children loved every minute of it," said Luther.

Luther did too.

"I enjoyed it all, but I enjoyed most the moment of discovery. The moment a child discovered they could do something."

role in his musical development.

"I started singing in my church choir when I was a kid," he said. "It was kind of forced upon me. I was raised in a pretty religious family."

Although he was skeptical when he first started singing in the choir at St. Andrew's Church in Hanover, Montgomery said he met one of his most significant musical influences at the time, Rev. Bob Mackie.

"He had this amazing baritone voice," Montgomery said of Mackie. "His voice was like a wall of sound. He was a huge influence on me. At that time, I can remember thinking 'If I could put some really heavy guitar behind a voice like that, it would sound great.'"

Montgomery formed his first rock band called Crazy Frank when he was 16. He started another band at the age of 18 called Laugh At The Monkey.

"That was cool," he said of the experience, "we were playing in front of capacity crowds at 18 years old."

In 1991, Montgomery formed a band called Bone Dry System. While in that band, Montgomery was nominated for a Boston Music Award for outstanding male vocalist. The band broke up in 1996 when Montgomery decided he wanted to head in a new musical direction.

"I just wanted to do my own thing," he said of the experience. "I wasn't trying to be arrogant or anything like that. I loved being in that band. My best friend Tim Sweeney was in it with me, and he was a major influence on me. At the time, I knew I had a lot of music in me and I just wanted to say it my way.

When 1997 rolled around, Montgomery was going through some good times and some tough times, both of which influenced his budding career as a solo artist separated from Bone Dry System. His grandfather, who practically raised him, passed away. But at the same time, his daughter was born.

"I wasn't playing music much at that time, but I knew I wanted to do an album donated to my (grandfather)," he said. "I finally wrote and released a two-song EP called 'Two Songs For Bob,' which got played on the radio like there was no tomorrow."

Last March, Montgomery released an LP called "Opening Water," and now, he is getting ready for the official release of "Jupiter 1973." Although the new album is not officially on the market yet, Montgomery said the whole thing can be downloaded off the Internet right now.

"I feel like I've definitely matured as a musician," Montgomery said. "The birth of my daughter really brought me down to earth. The stuff she says just blows me away, and she's made my life really good."

When it comes to what Montgomery thinks makes a good piece of music these days he said "It's not what you play, it's how you play it. What makes music worth listening to is when the passion of the music coincides with the words of a given song. It's all about using every instrument in a band as a voice. If the music is honest, then it's great."

Painting from the heart

as your paintbrush."

O'Neill said she is not inspired by anything in particular when it comes to deciding what kind of subject matter will be incorporated into a given painting—it all works for her.

"I just paint what's in my mind," she said. "If a subject interests me, I just try to paint it. But when I paint a certain scenario, I love using lots of color. I love watercolors because the painting depends on how the water moves, how it flows on the paper. The backgrounds you can create with the (watercolor) technique are amazing."

"I'm not good at painting detail. I think when I'm painting, I'm looking at the bigger picture. For instance, when I'm painting a group of trees, I don't see each individual tree—I see the whole forest. I like to show roads winding into large landscapes. A good painting should allow you to fall into it. It should carry you somewhere, and take you beyond a given point."

O'Neill said many of her artistic techniques were picked up from one of her major local influences, painter Virginia Avery of Marshfield.

"I've been studying with her for the past 12 years," O'Neill said. "So I use a lot of the techniques she taught me."

And O'Neill said she feels she's come a long way with her art, considering she never went to school for it. Before she became an artist, O'Neill served as a social worker, a librarian, and then she had some experience in Real Estate field.

"After all that, I decided I wanted to get into something I would really enjoy," she said. "I started painting for my own enjoyment, but as I kept traveling to Ireland with my husband, I found myself getting more and more drawn into painting. I never went to school for art, but as a child, I could draw pretty well. I've always admired art, so this was bound to happen."

O'Neill said she's progressed and grown as an artist over the last decade and a half.

"My work has changed a lot over the years—it's improved. I think the secret to getting to be a good artist is painting from the heart, no matter what the subject matter is."

And so far, O'Neill said her techniques are getting through to audiences of her show at the South Shore Conservatory gallery.

"I just paint what's in my mind," she said. "If a subject interests me, I just try to paint it. But when I paint a certain scenario, I love using lots of color. I love watercolors because the painting depends on how the water moves, how it flows on the paper. The backgrounds you can create with the (watercolor) technique are amazing."

Cohasset artist Pat O'Neill

"People have been very receptive," she said.

O'Neill is happy with her full time painter status, but she knows time will make her grow as an artist even more.

"It's like life in general," she said. "If you stick to something, results will come, and eventually, you'll get some kind of breakthrough. For me, it's all about improving. When I finish a painting, I always get the feeling that I can paint a better one, which is great. An empty piece of paper is very exciting to me, and I always welcome the challenge of doing a new and interesting painting. I feel very lucky, because it's tough for a lot of people to find something they're very passionate about."

For more information on O'Neill's current show call the South Shore Conservatory Staircase Gallery at (781) 749-7565 X16.

SOUTH SHORE REAL ESTATE

Home buying goes high tech

By Tom Gorman
TGORMAN@CNC.COM

Your dream home could be just a mouse click away. As more real estate agents offer high tech approaches to home buying, future homeowners can check out a house without leaving the comfort of their computer chair or, in some cases, their car.

In the past few years, several local realtors have developed web sites where potential buyers can log on to view listings. Some even use a radio transmitter that they place in a house for sale that will broadcast a full description of the home.

Most agencies list homes by community. Choose a realtor, click on a town, and then view a list of abodes.

There are some sites that allow you to view not only a picture of a house, but a full description.

Some sites not only list homes, but allow a customer to narrow the choice.

In Jack Conway Realtors' site, www.jackconway.com, a customer can punch in the type of house, price range, and number of rooms that he or she wants.

A matching or near matching list will appear showing homes within the price range and specifics you choose.

Some go even further.

Two local agencies offer computer home tours.

Herbert W. Raymond & Son features a 360 degree view of a room or a neighborhood of a home for sale without leaving their Weymouth office.

"With a click of the mouse, you can follow around and see an entire room or a neighborhood," said agent George Raymond, who likened it to Disney World's 360 degree movie theatre.

He explained that a special digital camera is used to take photos of a home and its surroundings.

"We can take pictures of the outside of the home, and the customer can have a 360 degree view of the neighborhood," Raymond said.

DeWolfe Realtors at www.dewolfe.com, offers a full motion video tour of each home they have for sale.

Called "DeWolfe Home Movies," a client can view the interior and exterior of the home without leaving their home computer.

"The tour shows the complete home, as if you were walking through it," says their home page.

"With a click of the mouse, you can follow around and see an entire room or a neighborhood."
George Raymond

As more young buyers now consider how a community's school system rates, realtors have developed a school page.

Dwyer & Mullin Real Estate of Cohasset not only profiles each of the coastal communities, but also their schools.

The company's school page includes a breakdown of each school district, including results of the recent MCAS test as well as other standardized tests.

Also, there is information about the number of schools in a given town, enrollment information, whether the system participates in district programs, and special course offerings.

They also offer a free e-mail service called "Househunter's Hotline." A participant can receive personal notices about newly listed properties and match notices to a person's preferences that they list for the agency.

Many potential buyers say that they like the ease of perusing the listings at home, which saves them time from running from house to house.

"Customers can log on and gives us a price range and other criteria that we try to match," said office manager Nancy Leonard. "Once matched to a customer's information, we automatically e-mail them."

If you are looking to buy out of state, Realtor.com is the place to go.

Simply log on, choose the state you're interested in, type in a city or town, and you will have a complete list of homes on the market.

You can even check out particular neighborhoods and schools in the area of a home.

Other realtors who offer online services include www.hunneman.com; www.homecenterre.com; www.CrescentRE.com; www.seaside.com; coastalcountryside.com. Century 21 also offers a website service for customers.

House hunters can log onto www.townonline.com/southshorehomes for information on the local real estate market.

Additionally there are on-line services that offer mortgages.

Some well known mortgage companies, such as East-West, have an on-line application that can be filled out in minutes. You're approved (or not approved) within hours.

Agencies say that customer feedback on their sites is positive and helps business.

"It's been very favorable," Leonard said. "It definitely draws more customers."

Many potential buyers say that they like the ease of perusing the listings at home, which saves them time from running from house to house.

And if you're driving around and happen to see a house for sale but don't feel like leaving your car, chances are you can just turn on your radio.

Some agencies have installed a low power transmitter in a home for sale that will transmit a recorded description of the property.

A sign indicates a particular AM radio frequency that can receive the transmission.

An interested person can park their car in front of the house, turn on the radio, and listen to a message of the facts and figures.

Now, if only moving can be that easy.

Information is current as of October 02, 2000. For information on specific mortgage programs, call the lender. Rates, points, and programs are subject to change daily and cannot be guaranteed. Points include discount fees and origination fees. Quotes = rate+total points, APR (annual percentage rate), calculated as follows: conventional 20% down and $100,000 mortgage; jumbo 20% down and $252,700 mortgage; FHA 3%--5% down and $100,000 mortgage. Most quotes are for 30-day lock-ins, but can vary. Maximum conventional loan amount is $252,700; jumbo loans are in excess of $252,700. ARM--adjustable rate mortgage. ARM rates are quoted as follows: rate +total points/APR (type of ARM program is listed in parentheses). LTV--loan to value. MI--mortgage insurance. NA--not available. NQ--rates not quoted. Veterans receive special benefits through VA's mortgage program

By Carol Bulman, President
CONWAY FINANCIAL SERVICES

We've been receiving many requests lately for information about the VA mortgage, and I thought it might be timely to review some of the requirements and the advantages of this loan program.

The VA Guaranteed Mortgage Program serves our United States Veterans and armed forces, as well as spouses of veterans who died of a service-connected disability. It offers mortgages of up to with zero down payment to purchase a home.

Contrary to popular belief, the money for a VA mortgage does not come directly from the VA or U.S. government. The government is actually not the lender, but the guarantor.

The United States government guarantees each VA loan 100 percent, which means it will step in to bail out the lender if the veteran defaults on the mortgage. The guarantee comes from a fund, similar to an insurance fund, which is partially funded by the government and partially contributed to by the veteran. The veteran's contribution is called a "funding fee," paid at closing or financed with the mortgage. (The veteran who is 100 percent disabled due to an injury received during a U.S. conflict is exempt from this fee).

Contrary to popular belief, the money for a VA mortgage does not come directly from the VA or U.S. government. The government is actually not the lender, but the guarantor. The mortgage money comes from large investors, such as banks, mortgage companies and insurance companies who are willing to make these high-risk 100 percent loans because of the government's insurance.

The VA loan remains a very popular program among qualified veterans. The advantages include both 100 percent financing and flexible qualifying standards. Rates are comparable to conventional interest rates and the attorney fees are capped at a ceiling required by the VA. The VA loan is one of the last remaining programs that allows a new buyer to "assume" the loan and the responsibility of the mortgage payments. It's important to note with regard to the assumable option that the original VA buyer, now the seller, should have a "release of liability" executed at the passing to assure that their credit is protected in the event that the new buyer defaults.

The VA program has undergone two significant changes in the last decade, including the ability of a veteran to use his or her eligibility more than once, as long as the original loan is paid in full. It is also okay for the buyer to pay his or her own points. At one time the veteran could pay just one point, which added to the complication of doing business with the VA loan.

Remember to have your Certificate of Eligibility with you when you apply for your VA loan. If you do not have your certificate, your lender will give you a form to send into the VA to get a replacement.

Carol Bulman

If you are a Veteran and you would like to determine whether the VA loan is right for you, please call us at Conway Financial Services and we will provide you with the information you'll need to make that decision.

Jack Conway partners with Neighborhood Housing Service

Free First-Time Homebuyer Workshop

Neighborhood Housing Services, an MHFA and HUD-approved first-time homebuyers counseling agency, will be holding a free first-time homebuyer's workshop in partnership with Jack Conway Real Estate. This unique partnership was established to better serve the needs of the first-time buyer. This workshop will be an all-day workshop on Saturday, Oct. 14. The workshop will be held at the Jack Conway School of Real Estate, located at 183 Columbia Road, Hanover. This one-day workshop will begin promptly at 9 a.m. and continue until 3:30 p.m. Lunch will be provided.

Agenda will be comprehensive as well as individualized. The focus will be on different aspects of the home-buying process, including how to locate a property within your budget, how to make an offer, and determining the best mortgage program for your needs. Each participant will have the opportunity to meet individually with mortgage professionals, realtors, and an attorney. Participants will learn how they can purchase property with little or no money and how to best utilize local down payment and closing costs grants now available across the South Shore.

Advance registration is required and space is limited. Call Debbie Kidd at Neighborhood Housing Services at (617) 770-2387 for more information or to register for this workshop.

DeWolfe announces two new associates

The DeWolfe Company announced that two new associates have joined its Hingham team, Barbara Wirkala, of Braintree, and Slovko Juric, of Weymouth.

Barbara Wirkala, a resident of Braintree for 50 years, with family ties in Hingham, is currently in DeWolfe's Career Foundations training. Barbara has been a real estate professional since 1996, and specializes in residential real estate. Barbara comes from an accounting and tax background, with a certificate from Bentley and Stonehill Colleges.

Slavko Juric, a resident of Weymouth, also with family ties in Hingham, is joining the DeWolfe Company as a graduate of the University of Zagreb and Lynchburg College of Business. He has been a residential real estate professional since 1994. He offers the ability to speak in several languages: German, Croatian/Bosnian/Serbian, Russian and Arabic.

Prepare plants for the chilly days ahead

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

Green thumbs up

Brilliant beams of sunlight streamed through the bedroom window as the sun rose on a chilly morning in late September. As I gazed out at the landscape below, I sadly witnessed the first frost of the season. Exposed patches of lawn were blanketed in a crystalline covering which rapidly melted when touched by the sun's warming rays. I heeded the weatherman's warnings on the first nippy evening, bringing many tender plants into the garage or sunroom and draping others with sheets to protect them from the chill, but I neglected to take the necessary precautions the subsequent night when temperatures dropped significantly lower. While a number of tender plants were unaffected by the freezing temperatures, the outermost leaves of many valued coleus, tropical plants and vegetables were damaged, turning limp, black and crispy in the days which followed.

Each property tends to have its own unique growing conditions and within the same landscape there could be several different microclimates depending on exposure to light and wind, elevation or the presence of a water. Low-lying, inland areas often experience frosts earlier in the fall and later in the spring than those higher up. Similarly, wide open, exposed spaces may be prone to early frosts while lawns and gardens protected by a grove of trees, shrubs, fences or walls may remain frost-free for weeks beyond those which are not sheltered. The presence of water, whether it be the ocean, a lake, pond, stream or even a water garden, will often moderate the temperature of the immediate surrounding terrain, delaying the effects of chilly weather. Buildings usually generate significant heat, as well, enabling tender plants to survive several weeks of freezing temperatures and providing a warm, sheltered environment for marginally hardy plants.

Once the thermometer begins to drop consistently into the twenties, nearly all locales are subject to killing frosts, usually signaling an end to the growing season. As the days grow shorter and the threat of hard frosts become more likely, several steps should be taken to prepare plants for the chilly days ahead. The timing of these frigid temperatures may vary by a month or more depending on your particular locale, but taking precautions now will reduce the likelihood of unnecessary losses should unexpected freezes occur.

With a warmer week in the forecast, many of my rescued tropicals will be moved back outside until frost threatens again. This will allow me to gradually acclimate them to the lower light conditions they will encounter in my home environment. Even house plants which spent the summer in the shade received much brighter light than they are likely to find indoors. By moving these plants into a sunroom or porch, the gradual reduction in light will be less of a shock and fewer leaves will turn yellow and drop although nearly all plants experience some leaf-drop or die back as they adjust to lower light and humidity in our dry, heated indoor spaces.

These plants should be closely inspected for unwanted pests that may be lurking among their leaves or in the drainage holes. It is rather unappealing to discover pill or sow bugs, worms, slugs or snails crawling about your home and many insects seem to target house plants out-of-doors as if they have a sixth sense, knowing that they have an opportunity to spend a comfortable winter indoors sucking the vitality out of our houseplants rather than face the harsh realities of our New England winters.

Aphids tend to be the most common intruder and are easily eradicated with soapy water or insecticidal soap. Scale, mealy bugs, white flies, and spider mites may be present which can be treated with one or two applications of alight horticultural oil spray which is essentially odorless and non-toxic except to bugs. Occasionally a few caterpillars may find their way indoors which can be removed by hand. More potent pesticides such as Malathion, Sevin, Orthene or Isotox are possible alternatives, the latter two chemicals offering systemic control which will be taken in by the plants' leaves providing a longer degree of effectiveness, but you may want to avoid these toxic applications if you have young children or leaf-eating pets.

As the days grow shorter and the threat of hard frosts become more likely, several steps should be taken to prepare plants for the chilly days ahead. The timing of these frigid temperatures may vary by a month or more depending on your particular locale, but taking precautions now will reduce the likelihood of unnecessary losses should unexpected freezes occur.

Take cuttings of tender annuals which have not been damaged by frosts. Coleus and impatiens root easily, especially if the stems are dipped in a rooting powder and inserted into pots of perlite or vermiculite. Ivy and vinca can be rooted in water. Geraniums and begonias will flower all winter on a sunny windowsill. Small specimens can be lifted and transplanted into containers filled with potting soil.

Pick herbs for drying or freezing and harvest your remaining frost-sensitive vegetables if freezing temperatures are forecasted. Burlap, sheets, newspapers or row covers can be draped over tender plants to extend their survival through several light frosts but may become tedious over a period of weeks and for many a weary gardener, a hard killing frost may be welcome as it signals an end to a damp, challenging, growing season. Once the gardens have been put to bed, it is time to relax and start dreaming of next year's beautiful flowers.

Bringing Tallulah to life

'Tallulah' visits Boston on the road to Broadway

City Lights

By Alexander Stevens
CNC ARTS WRITER

Everyone seems to agree that Kathleen Turner is the perfect choice to star as Tallulah Bankhead in the one-woman show that's coming to Boston. What's less clear is whether that's a compliment or an insult.

After all, Bankhead was a marginal actress, a prima donna whose ego far outsized her talent. She was more of a celebrity than an artist, as even she admits in playwright Sandra Ryan Heyward's bio-drama "Tallulah," which runs Oct. 10-22 at the Colonial Theatre in Boston.

And there seems to be a kindred spirit between Turner and Bankhead, a couple of honey-voiced beauties whose stage careers featured the role of larger-than-life women in Tennessee Williams dramas, and who seemed to revel in the role of playing the stah, dahhling. Both women have also been accused of having prickly personalities. But playwright Heyward, who's been working closely with Turner on the show, says that any rumors that Turner is a handful are unfair.

"I love her," Heyward says, in an elegant, whispery voice that might have fit in quite nicely at a Bankhead dinner party. "She's wonderful to work with, she's on-time and easy-going. I don't know why [she's gotten a bad reputation]. She's really one of the easiest people to work with. The other day I made a bunch of cuts to the script, and 20 minutes later, she had them learned. And [the cuts] didn't bother her or make her angry."

Bankhead, however, might have seen the cuts as an opportunity for a hissy fit. "Tallulah," a 90-minute, two-act play delivered entirely by Turner, captures the diva on the night of a big dinner party, a fund-raiser for incumbent President Harry S. Truman, who's expected to attend. Her career has started a slide from which it will never recover. She's in her 40s, and her best work is behind her. (Bankhead received strong reviews for her work in 1939's "The Little Foxes.") In "Tallulah," she's just booted Marlon Brando off her latest play, "The Eagle Has Two Heads," a move she admits she made out of the fear of being upstaged by the raging young talent.

During the course of the evening, she shows plenty of the braggadocio that we associate with stars of that era, but, of course, her insecurities will soon percolate up.

"I wanted to write about getting through a night with a star, and she seemed like the perfect person," Heyward says. "She has a sense of humor, she was charming, and she was self-destructive. She just seemed like the right person to write about."

Although Heyward researched Bankhead's life and many of the play's details are accurate — her feelings about the brutish Brando are some of the most interesting — Heyward explains that the character is more of a composite of different people than a strict character study of Bankhead.

"I grew up in a show business family," says Heyward. "I had known lots of actors and actresses, and I wanted to write what I knew about. Tallulah was one of the few people I didn't know about, but I was able to invest lots of qualities in her [from other people I knew] — she was an amalgamation of lots of stars. The play could have been about any number of actresses. I chose women from this era, because in order to have made it, they had to be so tough. They were interesting people — so many darks and lights in their lives. Such huge egos, and yet no egos at all."

The portrait isn't always flattering. Bankhead realizes she's become a bit of a joke — a joke that, on her good days, she's able to laugh at. She took the sting out of some her worst reviews — one critic called her Cleopatra "The Queen of the Nil" — by laughing at them herself. Her drinking is getting the best of her, and she's becoming increasing isolated, as age starts to take its toll. There's a definite sense that she could one day be a resident of "Sunset Boulevard."

"Stardom is very difficult to deal with," says Heyward, trying to explain why unhappiness seems to be a frequent visitor to celebrity. "Your face is up there on that great big screen. It's pretty heady and pretty hard to deal with. You have to just keep reminding yourself that you're normal, that you're one of us. That's easier to do now than it was in my mother's or grandmother's generation, because [the stars] were told they were different. They were kept in a different world, in a stable by themselves like little racehorses — or great big racehorses."

Heyward and her producers may be taking a gamble with a show based on the life of a woman that many people can't identify. The writer admits that when she took her own personal survey of what people knew about Bankhead, people under 60 were pretty much in the dark. But she thinks the play has broader appeal than just Bankhead fans.

"We'll certainly know more [about audience reaction] after this tour," she says. "Even if you don't know who [Bankhead] was or what she did, there's Kathleen. And her name is fairly potent. It's a star playing a star."

Heyward says that as soon as she finished writing the play in 1997, the first actress that came to her mind to play the role was Turner. Her instincts were apparently correct, because Heyward says that, as she now watches rehearsals, "It's hard to separate who's Tallulah and who's Kathleen."

And give credit to Turner — it's not every actress who would jump at the chance to play a fading star whose career is sagging under the weight of age. It's a story line that surely hits a little too close to home for many actresses.

But Heyward isn't surprised Turner took the challenge. She says, "Kathleen has always been a risk-taker."

"Tallulah" plays Oct. 10-22, at the Colonial Theatre in Boston. Call (617) 931-2787.

Standish Humane Society. P.O. Box 824, Scituate, 02066, 781-834-4663, www.standishhumanesociety.com. Standish Humane Society has the largest no-kill cat shelter in the area. We currently house 80 cats at the shelter 40-50 kittens in foster homes. All cats have been examined by a veterinarian, tested for Feline Leukemia and Feline AIDS, sterilized, vaccinated, wormed and treated with a long acting flea preventative. The cats are uncaged in a loving, homelike environment. We specialize in doing personalized adoptions. Standish also has a home to home dog placement program and a reduced cost spay neuter program in which 26 area veterinary hospitals participate. Volunteers needed.

"Quincy Animal Shelter, now a No-Kill Shelter" is holding Pet Adoption Day every Saturday from 10am - 4:00 pm. There are many dogs, cats and kittens available for adoption. The Shelter is located at 56 Broad Street, off Southern Artery near the Quincy Police Station. You do not have to be a Quincy resident to adopt an animal. For information call 617-376-1364.

The Collie Rescue League of New England, Inc. is a non-profit organization serving all of New England and is comprised of volunteers dedicated to the preservation and well being of the breed of dog known as the Collie. The League provides rescue, placement and problem intervention service for all purebred rough and smooth Collies of both sexes and any age. We do not turn our backs on any purebred Collie! Child's paradise

This museum knows how to ignite a young imagination

City Lights

Parents see a trip to the Boston Children's Museum this way: I'm going to be stuck in traffic, surrounded by the Big Dig, for just a few hours of fun.

The child sees it this way: I'm going to watch big trucks AND run around like a maniac touching everything? Oh boy!

Let's face it, if you're planning a trip to something called a Children's Museum, you might as well get into the spirit of the occasion. Pop in a CD of kiddie tunes, ignore the traffic and just marvel at the sheer number of construction cranes as you make your way off the Mass Pike and into downtown Boston.

And have fun at the museum.

Lots of fun.

My 3-year-old son, David, had a blast running from one exhibit area to the other, trailed by mom pushing the stroller with baby Megan. My need to contain him while nursing Megan made the new Playspace our first stop — not only is it geared especially to children 3 and under, but it also comes with a handy gate that guaranteed he would stay within Mommy range.

Not that he tried to wander. He was too busy pumping imaginary gas into a child-sized convertible, which he later drove with its radio blaring "Elmo, You Can Drive My Car."

He played with wooden trains, bounced balls and rolled hula hoops, played on a climbing/slide structure, gave a baby doll a bath. And when we were finished, he capped off the visit by filming an enthusiastic thumbs up on the area's interactive computer. (Megan had no comment — at 5 months, she's still too small even to use the shoe-free padded area designated for crawlers.)

We started at the top of the museum and worked our way down. David had a blast dancing in front of a green screen and camera, which inserted his image into the opening credits of the PBS animated series "Arthur." The rest of "Arthur's World" also held his interest, from Mr. Ratburn's classroom (where we cast a vote for Arthur as class president) to a quick stop at the library for a story and a quick game of hide and seek around the tents at Arthur's backyard camp-out.

In "Grandparents' Attic," David liked trying on a pair of firefighter's boots but was less enamored of the other costumes. ("That's for girls," he said.) He much preferred making train noises on the Japanese subway system in "Teen Tokyo."

This was where I have my one beef with the museum: there's only one elevator. Stroller-encumbered parents have to make their way down to one end of the museum, only to double back at the stairs. They do offer free backpacks for younger children and a stroller-check area, but when a stroller is a must, the elevator is a bit inconvenient. The view of Boston and the Fort Point Channel area through the glass walls is spectacular, however.

If you listened to my son talk about his trip, he'd mention the elevator. He'd point out that he got to be on "Arthur" and play with bubbles and boats.

But that would be after he talked your ear off about "Construction Zone," the area where kids can play with trucks and cranes, try out a real jackhammer and — most important to him — put on a hard hat and "drive" two real Bobcat loaders. For a truck-obsessed boy, this was Nirvana.

When he's older, I'm sure what will draw him is the New Balance Climb, geared for ages 5 and up, a two-story maze of tubes, bridges and climbers. The few kids around during our weekday visit seemed to spend most of their time there.

Other thumbs up from the visit include the "Supermercado," a Latin American grocery, was fun for David, who filled a basket with plastic vegetables, meat and bread while "shopping" with another child who acted as clerk and operated the register. And, while he loved lying beneath a tank to watch turtles, he found the giant lobster in the "Under the Dock" section too scary — especially when his clueless mother made the claws open and close.

A note about food: while food carts are available outside by the giant milk bottle in the warm months, as it gets cooler, the only thing available on-site is McDonald's. Kids generally won't argue with that, but parents who would rather not eat McFood might want to pack a lunch to be eaten in the museum's lunch room.

New Releases

ARENBAKED IN AMERICA (R) The popular Canadian rock-comedy band is shown during two weeks on tour, in actor Jason Priestly's directorial venture. The wonderful voice of Steven Page and engaging personality of Ed Robertson dominate, in an unassuming, unaffected documentary about sudden fame, ecstatic fans and good humor. (D.B.) B

GIRLFIGHT (R) A Brooklyn Hispanic girl (Michelle Rodriguez) defies her traditionalist father and takes up boxing. She meets a nice boy boxer (Santiago Douglas) and a relationship blossoms. Somewhat heavy-handed feminist elements merge with a predictable ethnic striving motif, and the boxing isn't particularly exciting either. (D.B.) C+

INTO THE ARMS OF STRANGERS (PG) A fascinating documentary on one aspect of the Holocaust that hasn't been covered yet — the successful plans to get young Jewish children out of Nazi-occupied countries and into safety in England. But there's much more. The filmmakers have found stunning, rare archival footage that actually shows the story while the children — now elder adults — tell it on camera. Heartbreaking and heart-warming. (E.S.) B+

THE TAVERN (PG-13) Two buddies (Cameron Dye, Kevin Geer) try to make a go of it with a Greenwich Village tavern-bar, encountering slimy rivals, fickle patron tastes, a talented cook whom everyone wants to hire and criminals who are after insurance money. A pretty lady with (as they say) commitment issues intrudes as well. Hope-filled but ultimately uninvolving. (D.B.) C+

URBAN LEGENDS: FINAL CUT (R) The inevitable sequel, cast as the story of a college cinema class' efforts to make a thesis film while murders pile up in alarming numbers. No particular verve to the venture, and with an almost unbearably idiotic screenplay, but a few moments of fright — only a few — help it limp along to its "surprise" ending. No doubt there'll be more, even after this supposed "final cut." (D.B.) D+

Ongoing

AN AFFAIR OF LOVE (R) Strangers (Nathalie Baye and Sergi Lopez) meet through a personals ad and begin a weekly sexual affair at a discreet hotel. The relationship deepens, and through interviews with the man and woman we get each other's side of the affair. Beautifully acted, a slight, fragile, almost evanescent piece, fitfully erotic. (D.B.) B

ALICE AND MARTIN (R) A handsome, troubled young man (Alexis Loret) and a beautiful young woman (Juliette Binoche) finally figure out that they're in love. But he bears a terrible secret, a crime unpunished, and it nearly drives him mad. Beautifully photographed, ably written, acted with varying degrees of competence, the latest film from Andre Techine. (D.B.) B

ALMOST FAMOUS (R) Cameron Crowe's remembrance of his teenage beginnings as a writer for Rolling Stone, cast as a road trip along with a rock band, trying to get the great interview. Our boy meets the roadies and groupies and gloms to the underbelly of the band phenomenon. With Billy Crudup, Jason Lee and newcomer Patrick Fugit. (D.B.) B+

BAIT (R) An incomprehensible mishmash about a smalltime criminal (Jamie Foxx, whose shrieking comic shtick abysmally fails here) who comes to be used by the feds (David Morse) to find a bigger fish. All this is balderdash enough, but the set pieces — the inescapable chases and explosions and stuff — have no coherence. Autumn dreck. (D.B.) D-

THE BALLAD OF RAMBLIN' JACK (Unrated) As a traditional folk singer, Ramblin' Jack Elliott has carved out a major reputation over the past four decades. But he's even a better storyteller, hence his nickname. This documentary look at him — by his daughter — shows all of that, but also focuses on the shaky father-daughter relationship that's been haunting her most of her life. A tad long, but fascinating, with some outstanding music. (E.S.) B+

BITTERSWEET HOTEL (Unrated) A documentary about the rock band Phish, centering primarily on one band member's chatterings and showing the group in action, including a huge (70,000 audience member) event in Maine that lasted two days and was a kind of mini-Woodstock. Considerable nudity near the end, but tedium throughout most of it. (D.B.) C

BRING IT ON (PG-13) White high school cheerleaders learn that their routines have been ripped off from a black squad, and try to compete with new material. Fitful stabs at contending with race and class issues, but mainly it's a fun take on hotties, of both genders, great teeth and gently suggestive situations. With Kirsten Dunst, and Jessie Bradford as the loopy-grinned cuties who craves her. (D.B.) C

Jamie Foxx must keep his wits about him in "Bait."

Young children are taken on a life-saving ride in "Into the Arms of Strangers."

BUTTERFLY (R) Spain, 1936, on the verge of Civil War, from the perspective of a bright young boy (Manuel Lozano) who is mentored by an old school teacher (Fernando Fernan Gomez) who has left-leaning, maybe even communist sympathies. The beauty of the tale is jarringly shaken by the tough ending. An impressive format for an interesting idea. (D.B.) B

THE CELL (R) Overly long, but graced by state-of-the-art computer-generated f/x, this combines a detective story, which would sustain it on its own, with sci-fi nonsense about getting into the minds of comatose people. Starring Jennifer Lopez, looking smashing, Vince Vaughn as a cop, Vincent D'Onofrio, Pruitt Taylor Vance and Marianne Jean-Baptiste. (D.B.) D+

DUETS (R) Strangers converge at a karaoke contest, along the way learning about themselves and doing some fine singing. Huey Lewis, Gwyneth Paltrow, Maria Bello, Andre Braugher, Paul Giamatti and Scott Speedman star, all but Braugher evidently doing the actual singing. A bit formulaic, but some of it is quite moving, some of it quite funny. (D.B.) B

THE EXORCIST (R) The great 1973 William Friedkin scare-fest, augmented now by 11 minutes, retains its power. Linda Blair dominates as the girl who's possessed, with Ellen Burstyn terrific as mom, Jason Miller and Max von Sydow as the exorcists and Lee J. Cobb as a wise D.C. cop. We'd never seen anything like this before. It still captivates. (D.B.) A

THE FANTASTICKS (G) Alas, the 1960 off-Broadway legendary hit, replete with "Try to Remember" and "Soon It's Gonna Rain" and other great songs, gets a tepid, if sweet-tempered film outing, starring Joey McIntyre (New Kids on the Block), with Joel Grey and Brad Sullivan as the dads and Jean Louisa Kelly as our boy's true love. It is lovely gossamer but oomphless. (D.B.) C

HIGHLANDER: ENDGAME (R) Another sequel, again about the 400-year-old immortals who can only kill one another by lopping off heads. The TV series' Adrian Paul, who evinces some animation, co-stars with the wooden Christopher Lambert, who's long been around for the ride. Lots of sword fighting, special effects whizbangery, idiotic dialogue. (D.B.) D+

NURSE BETTY (R) A comedy-melodrama about a simple girl (Renee Zellweger) who is fixated on a TV "doctor" (Greg Kinnear) while two criminals (Morgan Freeman and Chris Rock) pursue her. This Neil LaBute film is terrifically written, imagined and acted, keeping the audience continually on its toes. Few of its bits are predictable, none is boring, all are done with panache. (D.B.) A-

THE ORIGINAL KINGS OF COMEDY (R) Foul-mouthed comedians — Steve Harvey, D.L. Hughley, Cedric the Entertainer, Bernie Mac — in concert, with sometimes hilarious riffs on race, sex, life, put-downs of whites and of rappers, a dollop of victim-status self-pitying, considerable wit. Mac is largely incomprehensible, though the overwhelmingly black audience whooped appreciatively. (D.B.) B-

PSYCHO BEACH PARTY (R) A spoof of the beach blanket bingo and psychotic killer genres, set somewhere in the 1950s with gorgeous girls and guys, surfing, and anachronistic dialogue from contemporary black dialect and, of course, the question: Who's offing all the honeys? With Thomas Gibson, Lauren Ambrose, the legendary Charles Busche and others. Hit or miss. (D.B.) C-

THE REPLACEMENTS (PG-13) A football strike obliges Washington Sentinels owner (Jack Warden) to hire a veteran coach (Gene Hackman, cruising harmlessly through the role), who assembles a grab-bag of losers, has-beens and a college never-was (Keanu Reeves) as his quarterback. Expectable intra-team squabbles among a stereotypical bunch, a romance, a setback, eventual triumph. (D.B.) C

SAVING GRACE (PG-13) A suddenly bereft Englishwoman (Brenda Blethyn), aided by her trusty gardener (Craig Ferguson), decides that growing marijuana, in bulk, and peddling it through the mob, is her road to salvation. At once funny and tender, with first-rate performances and a wry Brit humor in every frame. Makes one want to light up. (D.B.) B

SOLOMON & GAENOR Romeo & Juliet in 1914 Wales, with an Orthodox Jewish boy (Ioan Gruffudd), who doesn't let on that he's Jewish, and his Protestant girl (Nia Roberts), who gets in the family way and … the respective families are grief-stricken. To add to the melodrama, the local drunken thugs go on a pogrom when economic conditions worsen. The lead performers are engaging, though the story doesn't triumph over cliché. (D.B.) B

SPACE COWBOYS (PG-13) Four senior citizen flyboys (Clint Eastwood, Tommy Lee Jones, Donald Sutherland, James Garner) are yanked out of retirement, by a reluctant NASA, to retrieve a soviet satellite. Both a charming-goofy comedy about grumpy old vets and a thrilling adventure in space, this is a sure-fire hit, deservedly. (D.B.) B+

SUNSHINE (R) The saga of a Hungarian Jewish family from the mid-19th to the late 20th century, with Ralph Fiennes playing grandfather, father, and son, and Rosemary Harris and Jennifer Ehle playing grandmother in two manifestations. The political material is awkwardly handled, though the central message emerges: trust not in the caprices of man; the Jew is always The Outsider. (D.B.) B+

THE TAO OF STEVE (R) A chunky know-it-all (Donal Logue, also in "The Opportunists") thinks he has the secret of total allure to women, the Tao of Steve — don't ask. Amazingly, he's not half bad at getting what he wants. His friends aren't so sure, and one woman he wants (Greer Goodman) finds him quite resistible indeed. For how long? A slight item, easy to take, easy to forget. (D.B.) C

THE TIC CODE (R) A musically gifted boy (Christopher George Marquette) with Tourette syndrome has a long-suffering, loving mother (Polly Draper, who also wrote the movie), and an idol, a saxophonist also with Tourette (Gregory Hines). The plot turns are a little too pat, but the acting, especially by the boy, is fine. Too bad Hines doesn't dance. (D.B.) B-

URBANIA (R) Partly fantasy, partly not, this tells of a mild-mannered New Yorker (Dan Futterman, first rate) who plans vengeance against the gay-bashing thug (Samuel Ball) who destroyed our guy's lover (Matt Keeslar). With fine cameos by Josh Hamilton as a sympathetic bartender and Alan Cumming as a sick man, the movie jolts, with painful visuals and an intelligent screenplay. (D.B.) B+

THE WATCHER (R) A serial killer (Keanu Reeves, impassive, as always) plays cat and mouse with a burned-out FBI agent (James Spader), even including the abduction of the agent's shrink (Marisa Tomei). Huge car chase and helicopter pursuit set pieces combined with embarrassingly arch dialogue and considerable arty photography. (D.B.) C-

THE WAY OF THE GUN (R) Psycopathic thugs (Ryan Philippe, shedding his golden boy angel looks, and Benicio Del Toro, more comprehensible than in "The Usual Suspects") abduct a pregnant girl, unaware that she's carrying the mob boss' baby. Although James Caan provides some subtlety in the movie, the bulk of it is overwrought violence, with nary a moment of relief. An endurance test for moviegoers, a botch of a movie. (D.B.) C-

WOMAN ON TOP (R) A gorgeous Brazilian (Penelope Cruz) leaves her handsome but not very thoughtful restaurateur hubby (Murilo Benicio), comes to San Francisco, instantly becomes a TV star in a cooking show, lives with a drag queen (Harold Perrineau, Jr.), is romanced by her producer (Mark Feuerstein) and … but why go on? Nobody acts convincingly, though you'll crave Brazilian cuisine throughout. (D.B.) C-

The Exorcist (A)

The four great movies of the 1970s that spawned the usual rip-offs are "Star Wars," "Jaws," "The Godfather" and "The Exorcist" — with the latter so possible, albeit unintentionally, for the plethora of spectacle-filled/hollow atrocities gracing cinema upon us for the last quarter century, sporadically taking us into the world of demons and testing our faith in a benificent God. Imitation is said to be the sincerest form of flattery, and after a spate of the cinematic carbon, providing us with ever more violent movies that seem ever more to recede from plausibility and grounded significance as the years go by.

Nostalgia is often tedious and there's enough of it in this space-granted, but know this: "The Exorcist," from 1973, is the scariest fiction movie ever made, and the best. It drew commendation from the Catholic Church, which still has a thriving, if infrequently used, exorcism element among its rituals, and condemnation from Billy Graham and other Protestant evangelist types, this in an era when it was still almost OK for such individuals to evince anti-Catholic bias and not be branded bigots. At Bob Jones University, George W. Bush's fave, it evoked fulminations. In its newly released form, with the addition of 11 minutes that director William Friedkin had cut for length but the book's author and screenwriter, William Peter Blatty, kept agitating to be returned, and a newly restored soundtrack, it's one film that should be seen on a big screen, preferably with someone you can grab onto when things get tough.

They get rough not right away but after a long exposition as we meet a Hollywood star (Ellen Burstyn, in a knock-out sensitive performance as a woman driven to the end of her rope by the inexplicable) filming a movie on location in Georgetown, gradually finding her sweet young daughter Regan (Linda Blair) doing strange things — like urinating on the floor during a posh cocktail party — and complaining of strange things being done to her. Mom takes Regan to a series of doctors who, scientists to the core, keep upping the ante on machinery and fancy tests, finding nothing while insisting that one more series of tests will reveal all, then acknowledging that the problem is undoubtedly psychological. When nothing is physiologically obvious, it's shrink time, lady.

Eventually Mom persuades a priest (playwright Jason Miller, in his acting debut), to help. Then the Church assigns a veteran priest (Max von Sydow) to conduct the exorcism, with the young priest assisting. Here, following upon scenes showing Regan doing and saying unspeakable things — vignettes never bettered in the cinema, never forgettable — the movie marches on to its remarkable conclusion. It is heart-stoppingly effective, not only owing to the acting and effects (pre-computer) but also because this film takes faith seriously, not cynically. It challenges one to believe or at least to consider belief in what rational minds discount. Name another film that does that.

Written by William Peter Blatty; directed by William Friedkin. Rated R

Urban Legends: Final Cut (D+)

Talk about self-referential! Like "Scream 3," cast as a movie about the doings in the previous movies, "Urban Legends: Final Cut" — don't believe that "final cut" jazz for a sec; this'll rake in the box office bucks and spawn a trequel — uses the movie within a movie shtick and pumps it for all it's worth. The premise of the original "Urban Legend" was that some of these fright fables have bona fides and pop out to do their worst just when, in good movie fashion, you least expect them. This movie spews forth a bit of early-on mumbling about the urban legends but then forgets about it, save for having the central character, a perky lass named Amy (Jennifer Morrison), tell her thesis advisor, Professor Solomon — also John Lithgow's character's name on "Third Rock" — that for her entry into the Hitchcock Award contest she wants to make a movie about urban legends coming true. Solomon is played by Hart Bochner, who has hovered on the brink of stardom but never made it. Like the teacher in the WB's "Young Americans," the prof has a continual two-day stubble, a new pop culture craze: one teacher per school, each stubbled. Go figure.

Once the movie has put that out there for us to contemplate (if you'll allow yourself a moment of giddiness and grant that this is the sort of film one contemplates, rather than just shamefacedly endures), we move on to its real business, which is to slaughter as many people as possible in 94 minutes and send us home hungry for more. Here's the thing of it: Everybody working on Amy's film goes to his or her reward, except for those we can plausibly imagine as the killer, among them the requisite sultry lesbian (Eva Mendes), the connected rich boy (Joseph Lawrence, who used to be Joey, of the vast Lawrence family), the girl-crazy, Euro-trash director of photography (Marco Hofschneider, who was the exquisitely sensitive little Jew in the remarkable "Europa Europa" but has grown up, and not to best advantage) or the stud-puppy snot, Toby (Anson Mount).

In addition to these characters, all cute Caucasians, the movie bows to the current Hollywood effort to suck up to the NAACP by inserting black actors willy-nilly. Here we've two: one (Anthony Anderson) is the stereotypical leering fat boy, drooling at the prospect of oral sex with the film's white girls; the other, the estimable Loretta Devine, back as the security guard, emphatically shouts "ain't" and "damn" now and again.

Oh, death? I almost forgot. The first death is that of morose Travis (Matthew Davis), whose twin brother Trevor (Davis again, surprise!) turns up, convinced that Travis died not of his own hand but by — dare one say it? — murder. Then we go down into a mine, outfitted with life-like mannequins: more death. Up into a tower: more deaths. Outside: more death. Here a death, there a death, everywhere a death-death … It knows no end.

Travel insurance

George Hobica

Ask George

By George Hobica
COPLEY NEWS SERVICE

Q. For months now, I have been trying to find out if there is travel insurance to cover the following scenario, in part or in whole: a married couple goes on vacation abroad and while there one of them suffers a stroke that lands him in the hospital where he must remain for several weeks before he can be moved. The other spouse runs up thousands of dollars in expenses (hotel, meals, incidentals).

While this has not happened to us, it could happen to anyone. We are both in our 60s, and in good health, but this possibility is in the back of our mind. Some kind of insurance to cover a situation like this would sure be welcomed.

A. Most policies will cover hospital expenses not covered otherwise, and some provide emergency medical evacuation. But most won't cover the situation you've described.

However, Access America (www.accessamerica.com) will cover up to $100 a day in reasonable expenses if both you and your traveling companion buy a policy. There's no stated limit on the number of days; it's done on a case-by-case basis.

Travel Guard - (800) 826-1300; www.travelguard.com - policy will pay up to $600 in such expenses.

International SOS - (800) 523-8662; www.internationalsos.com - is a firm that specializes in health care emergencies abroad, and provides no coverage for a traveling companion's expenses in the circumstances you described.

I imagine, however, that some hospitals would be sympathetic enough to provide a rollaway bed in the patient's room; and, some have special arrangements with area hotels or even have extra rooms of their own (a hotel I know in Paris actually rents these rooms to tourists when they'd otherwise be empty).

But you bring up a good point. It's too bad there isn't an insurance policy that covers every eventuality.

Q. Awhile back, we were waiting for our flight, which was delayed due to mechanical problems. We were told we had plenty of time and went to get something to eat. We got back to the gate 15 minutes before the new departure time, only to discover that the flight was already in the air. They said that they had made an announcement in the terminal, but we didn't hear it.

We've complained, but to no avail.

A. There's a lesson here: don't go wandering off in situations like this. If you're traveling with someone, one of you should stick around the gate area to monitor the flight's status.

Q. In June, I tried to fly from San Diego to Philadelphia on United with my husband for my granddaughter's wedding. At the last minute, my husband wasn't able to go, but United said they'd let him use his ticket, minus $75 for a one-year period in the future.

My flight from San Diego to Los Angeles, which was supposed to arrive at 1:55 p.m., was delayed, so I had to take an American flight at 11 p.m., arriving in Philadelphia at 7 a.m.

As a result, I missed the wedding ceremony, but I did make the reception afterward. This was not a weather-related delay.

I am 83 years old, have a bad heart and had to run to meet my connecting flights. I feel that United should refund my husband's fare in full.

A. Sadly, it sounds like you were just one of thousands of victims of United this past summer, and it's made worse by the fact that you're 83 and had to wait nine hours at the Los Angeles airport. A couple of observations:

US Airways has a San Diego-Philadelphia nonstop. It's always best to take a nonstop flight, especially if you're a senior citizen. I don't know why you chose an itinerary with connections; hope it wasn't something as silly as frequent-flyer miles.

Also, had your husband showed up at the airport and learned that his flight was going to be that late, he could have requested a total refund (as you could have), since your trip would have been in vain (you were going to miss the wedding that was the point of your trip).

I've contacted United on your behalf and we'll see what they can do for you — watch this space!

Other readers who have had problems with United, here's where to address your gripes: United Customer Relations at P.O. Box 66100 Chicago, IL 60666.

Q. On Aug. 18, my family returned on a flight, but my checked luggage did not. We submitted a form to the airline's claims department. I called for an update and the person I spoke to said it could be 90 days from the date they received the paperwork before I'd receive an answer.

Could you clue me in on what to expect?

It's no wonder that people carry on as much as they do.

A. Indeed. And the secret to carry-on luggage is to pack very, very light. Fortunately, the limit on airline financial responsibility for lost or damaged luggage has been increased from the old $1,250 amount to a more reasonable $2,500 per passenger on domestic flights (on international flights, the allowance is much less), and if your bags can't be found, I'm sure that the airline will reimburse you, although they may haggle about the contents' worth (hopefully you have some receipts to back up your claim).

Unfortunately, there's not much you can do besides wait. And next time, don't check your luggage.

Boards searching for answers to sewer project overruns

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

What a difference a week makes.

Just last week, the sewer commission thought the central Cohasset sewer project was in the black to the tune of $150,000.

But on Tuesday, the commissioners told selectmen that not only is the project's $1 million contingency fund gone, but the project is now $125,000 in the red.

And that's not all, as the commission estimated a total of $500,000 more is needed to fully complete the project which is extending sewer service to more than 800 homes.

There were plenty of questions but few answers at Tuesday's selectmen's meeting, when the town's sewer commissioners revealed their deficit.

"What happened?" Selectman Merle Brown asked sewer commissioner Gary Vanderweil and representatives from Tutela Engineering, the firm overseeing the project. "There's been $500,000 lost in the system somewhere."

Vanderweil said as of last week, the commission thought the project was in the black. "Up until a week ago, we thought we had $150,000 in our back pocket," he said.

He said over the past week, two things "came to light" that the commission hadn't expected and had pushed the project over budget. "The first was the police detail budget went way up to the tune of $100,000, and we also found bills that had not been put into the books," Vanderweil said.

According to commission records, $13,000 a month had been budgeted over the summer for police details. However, detail bills nearly tripled.

Is MCAS on the ropes?

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

When it comes to achieving high scores — Cohasset schools don't have a problem.

Whether it's SATs, AP exams or the MCAS tests, Cohasset students score among the best.

But that's not reason enough for the school committee to feel comfortable with linking a student's performance on MCAS to graduation.

The school committee is considering two resolutions to be put before the Massachusetts Association of School Committees' Nov. 1 conference in Worcester that would put the state's MCAS testing program on hold and/or eliminate linking it to graduation.

Curriculum coordinator Ruth Fennessey told the school committee the state keeps changing the "curriculum frameworks" — what students are expected to learn at a certain grade level — making it hard for teachers to keep up.

Supt. Edward Malvey explained the purpose behind MCAS is to have students across the state matched up with similar programs. But, he explained, if someone slips up on one test, he or she might not get a high school diploma. The

Cafeteria worker saves school child from choking

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Maria Calabria is a familiar figure to pupils at the Deer Hill School where she works in the cafeteria.

But the quiet woman shies away from the limelight and never thought about becoming a hero.

But thankfully, Calabria was in the right place at the right time when a fourth-grader needed her help.

During a recent school lunch, Charles Mushin asked his friend for a chicken nugget, dunked it in ketchup and popped it into his mouth.

Then the entire nugget slipped into his throat where it lodged itself. Charles immediately got up and ran to the kitchen where he motioned frantically that he was choking. A janitor first tried to help and then took Charles into the snack bar where Calabria stepped in and performed the Heimlich maneuver, an emergency technique for dislodging an object from the windpipe.

"I thought she was terrific to react that well."
— school nurse Karen Murphy

"I thought she was terrific to react that well," said school nurse Karen Murphy. "In the few minutes that it took me to get down there — and they were precious minutes — the nugget was right

A fighting spirit, a will to live

Norwell resident battling with breast cancer for past 11years

Editor's note: This is the second part of a four-part series in October as part of National Breast Cancer Awareness month.

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

Betsy Barlow Cunningham has been fighting breast cancer for 11 years, and she has no plans to let the disease beat her.

The 45-year-old Norwell resident is battling with the disease on a daily basis — yet she is determined to live a normal life despite the cancer's crippling effects on her body.

"My doctors tell me I'm terminal," said Barlow. "But I just have to assume I'll be okay. I don't have any plans on dying."

Much of Cunningham's strength comes from within her heart, but you only need look into her eyes when she sees her 14-year-old son Brandon to understand where she gets her will to fight..

"He's the light of my life and my No. 1 priority," she said. "My situation is very upsetting for him, but he handles it so well. He was only 3 years old when I was diagnosed with the cancer."

Cunningham has been through her share of treatments over the years. Now, the after effects of her chemotherapy and radiation treatment sessions have left her much weaker than she used to be, and the treatments have also left her without any hair on her head.

But those things do not bother Cunningham — despite her condition, her zest for life shines through, as does her will to live.

"This is who I am," she said. "This is who I am.

"Right now, I just try to get through the day and through the week. I can try to live a normal life but the fact is I'm a lot more bedridden and tired than I used to be. I have a lot of friends and family helping me out with things like cleaning my house and doing the grocery shopping."

Cunningham, however, still manages to find time for enjoying the finer things in life. One of her favorite activities is playing Cribbage with Brandon. Her other love is traveling around the world, which she has done a lot of over the past few years despite her situation.

National Breast Cancer Awareness Month

She was in Greece last June and she's also planning on a Caribbean cruise and a trip to the Florida Keys this January. She's also been to various places in Europe several times over the past few years.

"The cancer can't stop me from traveling at this point," she said. "Traveling gives me something to look forward to, and I think that's extremely important. I made an agreement with myself that I will travel somewhere in the world once a year, and I'm planning on

Student liaisons

Cohasset High School seniors Ted Gledhill, Jeff Schribner, Jim Trehon, Sarah Kidder and John Hertig are student liaisons to the school committee this year. Ted, Jeff and Jim attended the Oct. 5 school board meeting and offered their thoughts on a range of agenda items. Students will alternate attending meetings depending on their schedules.

"My door is open should issues come up during the school year," Supt. Edward Malvey said to the student liaisons at last week's meeting. "We do welcome you and consider you an active part of the organization."

Stories praised

School committee member Chartis Langmaid praised the Cohasset Mariner for keeping the community informed about what is going on in the schools through two recent stories on personnel changes. She specifically mentioned the story on new CMHS principal Michael Jones, written by Rick Collins, and the story on acting athletic director Ron Ford, written by Mike Spellman.

She said if residents hadn't seen the stories, "they should go to the library and read them."

Late bus in place

The school committee announced last week that there is now a late bus at the middle-high school.

"The late bus is in place and we want to make sure parents understand it is available," said school board member Mark DiGiacomo, who explained the late bus has not been part of the schedule for many years.

School Committee chairman Pat Martin said transportation issues continue to be a focus for the school department.

"We continue to look at bus routes and concerns," she said. Martin said school Supt. Edward Malvey will form a transportation task force to look at concerns.

Leachate hearing

On Oct. 12, at 7:30 p.m. in town hall, 41 Highland Ave., there will be a hearing on the request of the Cohasset Water Commission for the Conservation Commission to stop any further drainage of leachate from the Cohasset Heights Landfill (CHL) into the watershed of Lily Pond.

The hearing will be on the Request for Determination of Applicability (RDA) filed by the water commission, which asks the conservation commission to make a ruling that the drainage of leachate from the landfill violates the Cohasset Wetlands Bylaw. The bylaw was amended in 1999 to prohibit any discharge of leachate from a landfill into the watershed of a public drinking water supply.

"We also have requested the conservation commission to order CHL to dig a groundwater interception trench around the landfill," said John McNabb, water commission chairman, or to take other similar action within six months that will effectively keep all leachate on the CHL property.

"Lily Pond has not been contaminated from CHL, yet," McNabb said, "but there are signs that leachate has migrated toward Lily Pond from the landfill. We want to give the town of Cohasset the best assurances we can get to prevent any change that CHL will contaminate the water supply."

ZBA decision

The Zoning Board of Appeals announced that had approved Kevin Ulmer's request for a variance for the renovation of the former Cohasset Colonial Furniture Company building on the Hagerty property off Parker Avenue. Ulmer intends to use the building for a student marine research lab.

The construction will fully build out the second floor, and add office space on the third floor. Ulmer also plans on making the house ADA compliant, with the addition of an elevator and ramps.

Resignation

Ellen Freda announced her resignation from the Cohasset Historical Commission in order to focus her efforts more on the creation of the town's updated open space master plan.

A replacement has not yet been named, and Town Manager Mark Haddad is now taking names.

Forest Avenue sidewalk

Plans to install a sidewalk on Forest Avenue has developed so many details that selectmen hope to hold an informational meeting on the project sometime after the special fall town meeting.

"It's going to be a major undertaking," said Town Manager Mark Haddad of the project.

CRC petition

A petition with 112 signatures asking selectmen to "follow and enforce existing regulations and bylaws" regarding the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation was discussed at Tuesday's board meeting.

The petition, which according to resident Dick Karoff was organized by "seven or eight" town residents, said the CRC — a private non-profit organization hoping to "clean up" Cohasset Village and harbor area – is setting the agenda and vision for the town, rather than the towns' elected officials.

Selectmen Ronnie McMorris and Michael Sullivan said the letter showed there was still much confusion in the community over the group and its role in planning any renovations to the downtown and harbor areas.

"They can't just go forward," said Sullivan who added any proposals the group has must be approved by the board and have to go before Town Meeting before any money can be spent. "I see this as free planning and research by a group looking at different options."

"It's some private individuals who set up a corporation and are holding workshops discussing ideas," McMorris added.

The petition said the agenda "focuses on enhancing the economic interests of a very few businessmen," referring to CRC's prime backers, Kimballs and Atlantica owner Peter Roy, and Red Lion Inn owner Gerd Ordeleheide.

But Selectman Merle Brown, who is sitting on the town committee working with the group, said any concern over proposals should be held until later.

"There is still nothing to it at this point," he said. "None of it really has gone very far right now."

'Fist in his face' state senate race

By Jeanne M. Rideout
JRIDEOUT@CNC.COM

Off with the kid gloves.

On with the boxing gloves.

The race for the Plymouth-Norfolk Senate seat took an ugly turn this week, with Republican incumbent Sen. Robert Hedlund and Democratic challenger James Cantwell both accusing each other of negative campaigning.

Both candidates deny they have taken the low road, although many observers in both parties say are signs pointing to a negative campaign and one less focused on issues as it enters the homestretch.

Copies of material alleged to be Cantwell's confidential campaign strategy became public last week reportedly left anonymously in mailboxes across the district. A copy was also delivered to the Weymouth News office.

The strategy dated June 8, 2000 suggests doing "opposition research" on Hedlund "surreptitiously, under the guise of a college student taking a course in campaign and elections." Another section uses this advice from controversial Democratic campaign strategist James Carville, taken from the 1992 Clinton-Gore campaign: "It's tough for the opponent to land a punch on you if your fist is always in their face."

Was Cantwell planning on planting a mole in Hedlund's camp, or did a Hedlund mole "lift" a rough draft of a strategy later rejected by the Cantwell campaign?

According to Hedlund, the goal of the alleged strategy was to keep him on the defensive by spreading half-truths and quotes taken out of context.

"There are a lot of scurrilous things out there that are not true," Hedlund said, such as the accusation that he addressed a Montana militia group.

"I've never even been to Montana. I have been west of the Mississippi once and it wasn't Montana," Hedlund said. "I'm getting tired of trying to set clear what he is putting out there."

The strategy also involves inaccuracies on Hedlund stands, such as on whether tattoo parlors should be legalized.

"When I respond to correct the record, Cantwell says I'm not focusing on the important issues, when he was the one who brought the issue up in the first place," Hedlund said.

The strategy report portrays Cantwell as gearing up for a negative campaign.

"I'm extremely disappointed to learn that Mr. Cantwell intended to run a negative campaign from the start. He said one thing and is doing another," Hedlund said.

Cantwell said the material in circulation is not his strategy plan, but one of five proposals presented to his committee last spring. The suggestions for negative campaigning were rejected, Cantwell said.

"I have worked for 16 years to help people. I am proud of what I have done as a selectman, an assistant district attorney, and a congressional aide. I'm concerned about this negative attack libeling my character that has come from my opponent," Cantwell said. "These are personal attacks on me that are outrageous and do no justice to the voters on the South Shore who deserve an issue-based campaign."

Cantwell said he has been in three political campaigns — for Democratic State Committee in 1994, the Marshfield selectmen race in 1996, and this September's Democratic primary — and has prided himself on positive campaigning.

Hedlund has been criticized for negative campaigning in the past, including last year's race for mayor against David Madden. Cantwell said. Cantwell says numerous campaigns involving Hedlund have turned negative, citing past news reports from Hedlund's previous campaigns as proof of his claims.

"People should compare records," Cantwell said. "I am disappointed but not surprised this is the kind of campaign Hedlund is trying to wage."

The manner in which a campaign is conducted tells as much about a candidate as his stand on the issues, according to Cantwell.

"How we carry ourselves forward shows the character of the person who is running," Cantwell said.

Local pols give support to social service programs

No matter who the winners are on Election Day, Nov. 7, one thing is for sure: children will have advocates on Beacon Hill for the next two years.

At a forum sponsored by the South Shore Children's Champion Network, several state candidates gathered to field questions regarding child abuse, the Department of Social Services and their own backgrounds in dealing with family issues, while hoping to gain support from the child and family advocacy group.

In attendance at the event held at the Blue Hills Healthy Family center in Hingham were state Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, and his opponent Jim Cantwell, also from Weymouth, state Rep. Frank Hynes D- Marshfield, and state representative candidates for the Third Plymouth District, Democrat Garrett Bradley, and Republican Mary Anne McKenna, both from Hingham.

Organizers of the forum made no qualms about the purpose of the Children's Champion Network – part of the Massachusetts Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children. Deirdre Hobson, the MSPCC's director of public policy said the group had been very active in the past year lobbying and advocating for legislation to help children and their families. She cited accomplishments such as the establishment of a "child fatality review team" where every child's death is investigated and evaluated, and an increase in funding for the state's foster care system.

The candidates pushed their background in working with and for children and families.

Hynes and McKenna both have backgrounds in social work with McKenna spending time as a mental health therapist and Hynes trained in social work and guidance counseling. Bradley and Cantwell touted their experience as assistant district attorneys working in the juvenile court system, and Hedlund talked about his work as a four-term senator.

The candidates were asked to identify the needs of children on the South Shore, and in return gave a wide range of answers.

"The thing needed particularly in Hull is the need for accountability in day care centers," said McKenna. "We have accountability in our school systems, what about our day care centers?...Parents are going to work worried."

McKenna, now a pharmaceutical consultant, added she left her position as a therapist because of the "lack of proper funding" for the profession.

Hynes, the first chairman of the Plymouth Area Council of Children, said he feels the state needs to do a better job monitoring the development of children, such as more accountability in early childhood education, expansion of the Medicaid program and making sure every child has adequate housing.

Bradley identified t aspects that could b improved. "There's a need for more after-school programs. Two to 6 p.m. is the prime time [for children to get into trouble.]
There also should be a full day kinder garten option for p ents," he said. Bradley added he also hoped for further development of the Children's Champion Network programs, such as home visits from nurses for new parents – a subject near and dear to him. "Me and my wife Heather both went to law school. When we came home from the hospital [with their daughter Amanda] we did not have a clue...I can't imagine being 17 and going through it," he said.

Hedlund said his family has been very influential in giving him background on family issues.

"My sister is a single mother in Hull, and that's given me perspective, watching her struggle to secure proper day care," he said. "I have a close cousin that was a Department of Social Services' caseworker for years in the Dorchester office."

He also said he pushed for an increase in the daily reimbursement rate for foster parents, but "very frustrated" in Senate's reaction
o the bill which was eventually defeated. "Some of the comments I heard.
I was very disappointed," he said.

Cantwell said guaranteed health re was a main conn for him. He told of his disappointment when he brought his expecting wife to the hospital and the first question asked wasn't "How are you,' instead it was 'Where is your insurance.'"

McKenna, Bradley and Cantwell, each expressed concern over the high caseload and low salary given to DSS workers. "The number one issue is funding and staffing," said McKenna about the DSS. "We've got to find the funding for staff so the needs of families are getting met."

"They do not get paid any sort of living wage," added Bradley. "There has to be a set limit [on case loads] or they'll get overburdened."

Cantwell said social workers' case loads prevent them from intervening in possible cases of abuse or neglect. He said teachers, such as his mother, because of their daily interaction with students, are usually good guides as to whether a family needs a visit from a social worker. "She could remember putting together care packages to send home with children," he said. "Not enough is being done [to support social workers]. They aren't getting the kind of respect they deserve."

Hedlund said in a conversation he had with his cousin and her fellow social workers, he didn't get the impression that case loads were a problem. But he added so far the legislature has "failed" in properly funding social programs for children and families.

All five candidates said it is imperative to increase public awareness and support of these issues.

"A lack of public interest reflects on the Legislature," said Hedlund. He called for an enhanced community outreach program, continued public service campaign and more networking to raise the need for child and family advocacy.

Bradley agreed that a grassroots effort is needed, saying that is how he got involved with the Children's Champion Network himself. "It's something you can do from home, write letters, making phone calls, that's what I did," he said.

Hynes, pointed out that despite an increased recruitment campaign, the number of available foster parents in Massachusetts has dropped from 7,000 to 5,500 in the past three years. He said more needs to be done to ensure children are protected when they are abused, because "in every community it is happening."

McKenna called for more abuse consciousness. "We must continually educate, especially high school students about what abuse is, what is acceptable and what is not. If someone is raised in a house of constant abuse, they're going to think that's the norm," she said.

Cantwell hoped teachers can become more involved in identifying children who show symptoms of abuse and neglect. He also hoped the schools and court system could work closer together in a diversion program for at-risk or troubled students.

Nina Leek, one of the event's organizers, was encouraged both by the turnout of candidates and their responses. "I think the South Shore will be very well-represented," she said.

Sandell scores winning goal for Trinity Bantams

AROUND TOWN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

BUNDLE UP!

Hello Cohasset! Brrrr, it is getting cooler out each day, make sure to bundle up and get out to enjoy the days.

WINNING GOAL

In the win at Salve Regina, Trinity College sophomore forward Morgan Sandell of Cohasset, scored the winning goal on a free kick with 19:35 remaining in the second half! Morgan attends Trinity College in Hartford where he plays for the Bantams. Trinity is currently tied with the Bates and Wesleyan for seventh place in the New England Small College Athletic Conference. Morgan is tied for seventh in the league in scoring with four goals! Morgan is the son of Nancy and Jim Sandell who live on Stevens Lane. Way to go, Morgan!

HARVEST FESTIVAL

Well, as many of you are reading this, the Cohasset Farmer's Market Harvest Festival is taking place today, Thursday, Oct 12! It is running from 2:30-6:30 p.m. on historic Cohasset Common and promises to be fun for all ages. Please come down and join in the merriment. There will be sack races, pony rides, live music, face painting, great food and a whole lot of fun! Also available, will be fresh produce, beautiful flowers, hand crafted soaps, baked goods, homemade items and much, much more. You can also bring your best decorated/carved pumpkin for the contest and maybe win a great prize! The weather is looking good for this event, hope to see you all there!

PURE GOLD

A very special congratulations to Ira and Peg Stoughton for celebrating their 50th wedding anniversary this week. Ira and Peg are long time Cohasset residents and we wish them 50 more years!

GET WELL SOON

Dr. Robert Sceery has been under the weather lately. We're sure that he'd love to receive cards and notes from his many friends in town. Please send them to his address, 79 N. Main St. Those who know Dr. Sceery, love him! It's people like Dr. Sceery and his lovely wife Phoebe that make Cohasset such a special place to live.

HALLOWEEN FAIR

Pumpkins and cornstalks are appearing at local farm stands. Orange and black decorations are showing up in stores and plans are being conjured up for the South Shore Community Center Nursery School's annual Halloween Fair. This year's fair will take place on Cohasset Common on Oct. 29 from 1:30 to 3:30 p.m. A South Shore tradition for more than 20 years, the fair offers Halloween fun for the entire family. Ghosts, goblins and cartoon characters of all shapes, sizes and ages are encouraged to begin preparing to join in the fun.

For more information about the fair or the programs of the South Shore Nursery School, call Lynne Sheridan at 383-0036.

Please make sure to send in all your news, B-Days, special days and events, fun stories to share and tell and I am really looking for news on friends and relatives who no longer live here in Cohasset but may have come for a visit or have some news of their own. Please send all mail to jenpiep@yahoo.com, 622 CJC Highway or (781)923-1057! Thank you and have a great week. Jennifer Piepenbrink out on the floor and Charles was fine, breathing and talking."

Calabria took a course at Wellspring in Hull about ten years ago where she learned how to perform the Heimlich maneuver.

"My daughter was choking on a piece of bread and my sister-in-law helped her," Calabria recalled. "So I signed up for the free course."

Cohasset EMTs arrived and checked Charles over and he was fine.

Murphy said a child choking on objects at school is a fairly rare occurrence. The last time it happened was about six years ago.

But, nevertheless, having staff that can handle an emergency is invaluable.

Coincidentally the school department will conduct a course for staff in November that will include how to perform the Heimlich maneuver.

Murphy said she wrote a letter to Supt. Edward Malvey and the town manager praising Calabria.

"I wanted to explain how pleased I was with her reaction and how valuable she was," Murphy said.

Cohasset Dramatic Club produces shows, friends

'Plaza Suite' on stage this weekend

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Though the Cohasset Dramatic Club's fall production, "Plaza Suite" by Neil Simon, wallows in conflict on stage, there is anything but behind the scenes.

"I feel very close to the people I've been working with," said Linden Drive resident Elizabeth Dings, who plays secretary Jean McCormack. "We've developed relationships in a very short time."

The club's production of "Plaza Suite" is scheduled to go up this Friday, Oct. 13, and will also be performed Oct. 14, 20, 21, 27 and 28 at 8 p.m., and Oct. 29, at 2 p.m., at the Cohasset Town Hall auditorium.

Jean DiGiacomandrea, president of the Cohasset Dramatic Club, and producer of the three-act comedy, said she is excited about the show, and the benefits that follow.

"It's three acts and none of them relate at all. The first act is a middle-aged couple going through a crisis, the second is about a Hollywood producer that hooks up with his high school sweetheart, and the third is about a bride who has locked herself in her room on her wedding day," she said about the play. "It gets progressively funnier.

"I just enjoy the whole thing," said DiGiacomandrea, who is producing her sixth production. "I love the whole process, the end result. I don't know how to explain it. It's fun meeting new people, seeing the show from the eyes of someone who has never seen the show before, seeing how excited someone gets when they get a role, being on stage and hearing the applause."

Dings is fairly new to the live applause aspect. "Plaza Suite" will be her first on-stage acting performance since her graduation production from the American School of Dramatic Arts in 1997. Though she has appeared in a couple of commercials, and even had a walk-on role on "All My Children," being live in front of an audience adds a different dynamic to the acting.

"If something goes wrong, you just have to go with it," she said. Her inexperience was part of the reason why she chose to try out for the part of Jean McCormack, rather than a bigger role. "I read the part and loved it," she said. "Being new to the theatre I wanted a smaller part and I also have two young boys at home and didn't want to feel overwhelmed."

She said she has enjoyed working with the two lead performers in her act, Woody Farrick, of Dorchester, and Caroline Crocker, or Scituate, who play a married couple. Dings, a Hingham native who didn't get into acting until just recently, plays the role of a secretary having an affair with her boss, played by Farrick.

"They've been very nice and fun people to work with," she said. "As it gets closer to the production date, tensions get higher, but just because everyone wants to it to be perfect...But overall everyone's getting along well."

DiGiacomandrea said the one drawback to having three, non-related acts, is that the cast is sort of split off.

"The cast hasn't bonded quite as much, where it's three separate acts. They all know each other and support each other, but they haven't become quite as close as when everyone is in every act," she said.

With the curtain raising less than a week away, the production crew gets to spend a large amount of time together. For the past three months, they were meeting two nights a week and Sunday afternoons to rehearse. This past week, they have been there every night for hours, making sure the lighting is perfect, sound is good, and pacing is quick. "You could have a great show, but if it's six hours long, it's too much," she said.

The Cohasset Dramatic Club, said DiGiacomandrea, has been around since 1921, and boasts a membership count of close to 200. Along with putting on three performances a year, for which each member gets a free ticket, the club also puts out a monthly newsletter, and sponsors acting classes. It also does non-theatre related activities, "to keep people interested," said DiGiacomandrea, such as a pool party, and Christmas caroling.

Cast members also spend time off stage. "We tend to go out together afterwards," she said. "It's very nice how you get to meet people in the show and with time, maybe a year later, you've carried some friendships over.

"There's a lot of camaraderie."

Tickets are $10, and can be purchased at Front Street Books in Scituate and Buttonwood Books in Cohasset and Hingham, or by calling (781) 925-5439.

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Are you ready?

This summer there was a ubiquitous commercial on television for an Internet provider that spun through a series of images of people around the world, with each one smiling at the camera and asking, "Are you ready?"

Word is that if you tape that commercial and run it backwards, an image of Mother Nature comes on the screen for just a moment. With a smirk, she tosses a handful of frost-covered leaves at the camera and asks, "Are you ready?"

Well, are you?

We survived a rainy spring, a cooler-than-normal summer and now, autumn seems to be giving us the slip with a quick explosion of color, and a toss of the mantle to winter.

There will still be time this weekend for a leisurely trip to foliage country (which in many towns is our own backyard). There is still time to roll up the garden hoses (so they don't freeze); mulch the perennial bed; divide and replant the daylilies; and haul all the empty pots into the garage. No use in retiring the lawn mower just yet; the grass will keep growing even after a few good frosts, if Indian summer comes calling.

After last weekend, with its splendid blue skies and crisp fall air, we found our coworkers' grumbling about ugly weather, gray skies and biting winds about as welcome as a cold tile floor on bare feet at 6 a.m.

The days have quickly grown shorter, with darkness coming so quickly some nights that it's impossible to take the dog for a walk or go for a quick jog after work without toting a flashlight and donning that ill-fitting reflective vest that makes us look like flaggers at a road-paving site. It will get darker and darker, earlier and earlier, until Oct. 29, when we turn the clocks back an hour — which makes it darker even earlier. And, yet again, we'll try to figure out why that's supposed to make sense.

Earlier this week, dozens of communities across the country notched record-low temperatures for this time of year. Yet the long-range forecasters are saying that the weather patterns point to a less-severe winter for the Northeast this year. The cost of home heating oil has (predictably?) gone up as cold weather approaches, which is another predictor that we're in for a foul one.

Who to believe? Do we take a ruler to the wooly worms, measuring the width of their black bands (or is it the width of their brown bands?) as a tell-tale sign of winter's attitude?

Do we scour the Internet for more scientific evidence that the coming winter will be brutal or manageable, memorable or mild? Do we hang on the words of Dick Albert, Harvey Leonard and Mish Michaels? Or do we go with the conventional wisdom that surfaces in the lunch room at work?

New England winters are almost legendary elsewhere in the country for their variety, their beauty and, sometimes, their tremendous power. But when that first gentle snow drifts down and leaves the whole world outside wrapped in a blanket of white and silence, we'll remember why we live here and that there's really no place we'd rather be.

We are ready.

Ballot question debate Oct. 15

"A yes vote on Question 4 is a vote to keep the Legislature's promise that the 1989 tax hike would be temporary. This promise is now 11 years old," states Barbara Anderson, executive director of Citizens for Limited Taxation.

"People will vote no on Question 4 to support investments in education and health care and to target tax cuts at middle income families," states Jim St. George, executive director of Taxation Equity Alliance in Massachusetts.

Question 4 and Questions 6 (tax credit for tolls and motor vehicle excise taxes) and 7 (tax deduction for charitable contributions) promise to provide lively discussion between Anderson, St. George, interest groups and South Shore residents in attendance at the 6 p.m., Sunday, Oct. 15 debate — sponsored by the Hingham Republican Town Committee — to be held at the Hingham Community Center.

Moderating the discussion is Hingham Town Moderator, Thomas L. P. O'Donnell. The event is free to the public and refreshments will be served.

While the tax related questions will be highlighted, all other ballot questions will also be aired.

Support Article 3

TO THE EDITOR:

Recently all Cohasset residents were mailed a copy of the Warrant for the Special Town Meeting to be held Oct. 23 at 7 p.m. at CHS Auditorium. We urge you to read it thoroughly and to research any questions that you have.

Of extreme importance to our schools is Article 3. This Article requires a $319,350 (2.01 percent over the original appropriation) increase to balance the Town's operating budget for Fiscal Year 2001. A careful look at the numbers indicates that $660,670 is needed in increases in nine Town departments (Board of Selectmen, legal, water purchase, police, fire, school, public works, elder affairs and health insurance). These increases are partially offset by savings of $341,325 in sewers (general expenses) and $196,625 in savings on town debt service. Increases associated with our schools total $300,000, a 3.24 percent increase from when the budget was approved at the March 25, 2000 Town Meeting. We must support the increase in our town budget or the results for our schools will be devastating. The middle and high schools will need to collectively cut $150,000 and Osgood and Deer Hill will each need to cut $75,000. At the Deer Hill School, that means two teachers will need to be cut, class lists reformatted and class sizes increased. This is an untenable position to put our children and fine staff of teaching professionals in (especially when the 700 plus children at Osgood and Deer Hill are already sharing a technology teacher...they have computer lab only every other week and no Kindergarten computer lab time with the computer teacher). We need to continue to support our schools. We cannot allow mushrooming class sizes. Please, please read the Warrant carefully. Plan to attend the Special Town Meeting on Monday, Oct. 23 and vote yes on Article 3. Thank you for your consideration of this important matter.

Car wash support

TO THE EDITOR:

The Junior Class at the Cohasset High School held a car wash, at the Olympic Texaco on Main Street, on Sunday Sept. 24, and thanks to the town's donations, it was a huge success! In one day the junior class raised over $750 and we wanted to thank everyone for their contributions. A huge thanks goes out to George at the Olympic Texaco on Main Street for allowing us to use his garage for the day. His hospitality is much appreciated! The junior class thanks all who made the car wash a success!

King Street response

TO THE EDITOR:

We are writing in response to the paragraphs devoted to Mark Bell's proposal to the Selectmen that King Street stay in a state of disrepair. Like Mr. Bell and the Selectmen, we too are taxpayers in Cohasset and therefore are entitled to drive on scenic King Street. We do not speed. We too would like to see drivers drive more slowly and cautiously on Beechwood and other streets in this or any town.

We are quite certain there is a "final pave" agreement in the contract. We taxpayers helped pay that bill and therefore expect the contract to be honored in a timely fashion. To not do so would set an unwanted precedent for contract work in Cohasset.

Does Mr. Bell or Selectman Sullivan care to cover expenses for damage done to car undercarriages or to have tires realigned? Somehow their attitudes suggest the genesis of the "me generation."

Boosters club

TO THE EDITOR:

The Cohasset Soccer Boosters Club would like to thank all the people who supported the booster breakfast fund-raiser held at Deer Hill School last Sunday.

By purchasing your ticket, you enabled the varsity soccer teams to pay for their new warm-up suits, and the booster club to offer two scholarships this calendar year. We would like to thank the athletes for selling tickets and all of the parent volunteers who worked so hard at the event.

Unlike other years the price of a ticket afforded you the opportunity to be included in a raffle of items donated by local merchants.

We would like to mention the following for all of their help in making this year's event a big success: Atlantic Bagel, Good Sport, Cohasset News, Cohasset Hardware, RGP, Village Deli, Addidas, Springbook Toys, Verizon, U.S. Foods, Buttonwood Books, The O'Connell Family and Brad and Melinda Murray.

See you all next year.

Revitalization

TO THE EDITOR:

The board of selectmen has received a petition that can only be classified as hostile to the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation.

One of the selectmen has expressed disbelieve that many of the signers had actually read and comprehended the text of the petition they signed. Maybe that is so, but I've heard enough short-sighted, witless and mean-spirited comments on the subject to think that the petition does reveal a common point of view.

Perhaps the Mariner should publish the text and the names of the signers. A little daylight chases away the darkness.

Summer Street

Mark Haddad
Town Manager

DEAR MARK,

Thanks for your help getting Summer Street back together. It's starting to look like a neighborhood again.

Here's a couple of ideas that many of us think would help:

1) The speed on the street, as you know, is still a very big problem. We were wondering how the speed limit reduction is coming? Pretty much everyone in the neighborhood agrees, that given the density and shape of the street, it should not be higher than 15 mph. That is very reasonable.

2) Another issue is the huge trucks that roar down Summer street. Why not a weight restriction, such as we have on Pond Street. They could easily go around and down Elm which is much more suited for very large vehicles.

3) The intersection of Summer/Elm/Border is a total nightmare and an accident waiting to happen. An easy solution would be some kind of small "island" right in the middle. It would slow everyone right down and direct traffic in a more orderly way. Something like the one at Black Horse and Summer. Just some paint and dirt with a little grass seed. We could also use some stop signs. Definitely one on the Border Street end of Summer Street, and possibly one in front of the legion, for cars coming off Elm onto Summer. At least then people would know what to do when they hit that corner. Now, it's a total free-for-all.

4) Crosswalks to the harbor.

All these improvements would be virtually cost-free and go a long way to improving safety for everyone, especially the children in the area.

Finally, I know we've discussed this before, but I'd like to reiterate that if we are ever going to enhance the sidewalks on Summer, one of the few streets in town without a defined one all the way down, this is the time to do it. When they come through to do the repaving, it would be relatively easy and dirt cheap (Ha Ha!) to add a little dirt and build up the second half of Summer Street a little, where there are no raised defined sidewalks. It would be similar to what was done on Pleasant Street. This would be a very cost-effective way to solve a problem. Thanks for your efforts on behalf of the town.

Taking responsibility for the earth

LOCAL VIEW

JIM SHIPSKY

I think maybe it started with that dead squirrel in the middle of Pond Street. Most mornings I ride a bicycle from my home in the Beechwood section of Cohasset to Black Rock Beach, where I meditate for half an hour, then ride back home. On a bicycle you see a lot of things up close. Road kill, for instance. This one seemed to speak to me: "I'm your brother. Don't leave me here in the road where more cars will mash me into the asphalt." I stopped, got off my bike, and picked up that dead squirrel. I found a resting place for it under some bushes away from the road. I thought, "Rest in peace, little brother."

Since then I've moved a lot of road kill to greener resting places. Lots of squirrels and chipmunks, raccoons, turtles, skunks, possums, snakes, a duck, a pair of Baltimore orioles, a mourning dove. I feel a lot of sadness doing this. The sadness is offset a little by the joy of seeing unexpected wildlife on Cohasset's streets: coyotes and wild turkeys.

One morning in the winter of 1998, I noticed sunlight sparkling from dune grass along Atlantic Avenue. Passing these dunes became a highlight of my seacoast ride. Then one day in late spring I came upon heavy equipment destroying the dunes, loading the sand into a dump truck. The Conservation Commission stopped the destruction later that day, but not before half the dune was gone. This caused me to notice other dune destruction in the Sandy Beach area. Footprints showing where people walked on dune grass, killing it. Dead roots no longer able to anchor the sand against winter storms. In June heavy equipment arrived at the beach to "groom" the beach for the summer season. A struggling beach ecosystem was destroyed in a single day, allowing the wind to blow the sand away. Again I felt sadness seeing nature brutalized.

An introductory presentation for those who might be interested in forming or joining a group will be held Nov. 2, 7:30 p.m., at the Second Congregational Church, 43 Highland Ave.

As I arrive at Black Rock Beach each morning, it has become impossible to ignore the cloud of brown smog spreading from Boston out over the sea. Oct. 4, the smog was not brown, but dirty gray. So dense the old Hancock tower was barely visible. I can't help but wonder if I were in Boston looking southeast, would I see Cohasset covered by the same dirty gray blanket? I'm afraid to find out. I find my feelings have moved from denial to despair. So much environmental damage takes place daily, yet all around me people act as if nothing is wrong. I need to move through despair to a positive stance.

Recently on the web I discovered the Northwest Earth Institute, which seeks to build a network of people engaged in transforming our culture and our systems to enable humanity to live in a sustainable way on the earth. I contacted their affiliate in Arlington, Sustainable Step New England, and found they offer a nine-week study circle, a course of readings and discussion of ideas that have contributed to people's growing interest in living a life in harmony with their sense of place. This course is designed to assist people in learning a style of dialogue that stimulates thought and diversity of opinion. While each person may have insights or clarify their own directions, it is not designed to move the group toward consensus or decisions. I decided to see if others share some of my concerns and feelings. Here goes:

An introductory presentation for those who might be interested in forming or joining a group will be held Nov. 2, 7:30 p.m., at the Second Congregational Church, 43 Highland Ave. A Sustainable Step New England representative will be present to answer questions and conduct a short discussion as a sample of what a study circle is like. A workbook with readings will be available for those who wish to join the group. The workbook cost is $15. There are no other costs involved. The group will continue to meet once a week for nine weeks.

The purpose of the Deep Ecology Study Circle is:

- To clarify earth-related values through discussions about deep ecology and related topics.
- To discover how personal values affect the way we view and treat the earth.
- To explore what it means to take personal responsibility for the earth. Chapters in the workbook include: Deep Ecology, The Gaia Hypothesis, Spirituality and The Earth, Native American Wisdom, Ecopsychology, Simplicity, Bioregionalism, and Ritual.

TIPS training for parents

A Parents' Program helping to bridge the parent-child communication gap in the area of alcohol use and abuse will be led by Edward McCann on Wednesday, November 8 from 7 to 9:30 p.m. at the Teen Center Garage on Parking Way in Cohasset. The program is limited to thirty parents. Registration forms are available at the Cohasset Town Hall and at the Cohasset, Hull, Hingham, and Scituate Libraries. Registration forms need to be returned by October 30 with a $20 course fee to the Cohasset Drug and Alcohol Committee, 41 Highland Avenue, Cohasset, MA 02025. The Parents' Program is part of T.I.P.S. (Training for Intervention Procedures by Servers of Alcohol). In addition to parent-child communication, the program's purpose is to help prevent troublesome situations involving alcohol, to deal with situations where people have already had too much to drink, and to influence relatives, friends and neighbors to exercise control and act responsibly when using and serving alcohol. This is important training in light of the new "Social Host law" where adult hosts of parties bear responsibility for underage drinking. With the approaching holidays of Thanksgiving, Hanukkah, Christmas, and New Years the program will teach acceptable standards of practice for serving and consuming alcohol among family, friends and neighbors. Edward McCann, a certified T.I.P.S. trainer and a member of Servexcel, Inc. a Training Resource Group, says, "Experts agree that parents are the most important role models for their children." Each adult who participates in the program will receive a course handbook, and at the end of the evening a certificate upon successful completion.

Living history

I was curled up with a glass of Merlot and a bowl of popcorn in front of the boob tube the other night, channel surfing for the latest Shannon Tweed flick, when a young friend, a member of the high school set, called.

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

"What can you tell me about Senator McCarthy?" she asked.

Without hesitation or consulting notes, I rattled off the top of my head a pretty fair biography of the noted Communist-hunter from Wisconsin, including quotes such as, "I have in my hand . . . " and "Who promoted Peress . . ."

"Why do you ask?" I asked my young friend.

"Oh," she said. "I have to do a report on him for my history class."

Her history class! My God! The things I remember like they happened just yesterday are history now. Without realizing it, I have become a valuable source of information for youthful historians.

It's been 50 years now since Joe McCarthy first held up a piece of paper before the Women's Republican Club in Wheeling, West Virginia, and told them it contained the names of 205 known Communists who were working in the State Department.

I was between my sophomore and junior years in college, working the summer of 1950 in Larry Stone's Skeeball, Pokerino and Greyhound concession at Paragon Park on Nantasket Beach along with John Conlon and Bobby Rosenberg.

I recall the distinctly the day it was announced that the North Korean People's Army had stormed across the border into South Korea and President Harry Truman mobilized troops then occupying Japan to fight a "police action," not a war.

We played the latest records to attract marks to the Skeeball concession — "Rag Mop" sung by the Ames Brothers, "Mona Lisa" crooned by Nat "King" Cole and "Goodnight, Irene" sung by the Weavers with Gordon Jenkins and his orchestra.

The big movies were "Harvey," with James Stewart, and "All About Eve," with Bette Davis and Marilyn Monroe, and "Sunset Boulevard" with Gloria Swanson but the truly big event in Hollywood was the marriage of 18-year-old Elizabeth Taylor to Nicky Hilton.

Most of them (the pictures, not Liz' wedding) can still be seen on television, a brand new medium in those days, featuring Sid Caesar's "Show of Shows," and "Your Hit Parade" and "The Colgate Comedy Hour," with Eddie Cantor, Dean Martin and Jerry Lewis among others.

Ted Williams signed a new contract with the Boston Red Sox for a record $125,000; the 4-year-old Boston Celtics drafted Chuck Cooper of Duquesne, the first black player in the NBA; and Florence Chadwick swam the English Channel.

I recall all those things but don't get the idea that I knew Senator McCarthy personally. I only met him once when he was in town to investigate the Reds in MIT or Harvard or the Archdiocese of Boston, I don't remember which.

I was sent to interview him, along with Eddie Martin of the Boston Post, later a longtime aide to Ted Kennedy.

Eddie and I devised a plan to trick the senator. Eddie would engage him in conversation while I would slip a copy of the Harvard Crimson into his unwitting hands and the Post photographer, Frank Kelly, would snap a prize-winning picture.

But the senator foiled us. He wouldn't even touch the paper.

Sandy Beach parking lot

Responding to a letter from Sandy Beach Association president Robin Lawrence, selectmen hope to meet with the group to discuss the change in the traffic pattern in the beach's parking lot.

In his letter, Lawrence criticized the board for the "abrupt manner" the change was made.

Earlier this summer selectmen voted to add an exit at the far end of the Sandy Beach parking lot, because of traffic concerns. The change would have cars enter from the southeast end of the lot, and exit from the northwest end to increase safety while cars exiting the lot that is surrounded by dunes.

"The apparent unilateral decision by the board...is opposed by the association," Lawrence said in the letter. He also said "it is not unreasonable to expect that all parties of interest, specifically the Sandy Beach Association, would be consulted prior to a decision that may have a major impact upon the operation of Sandy Beach..."

The association suggested that the northwest exit be closed, the combined entrance/exit reconfigured, and the view-obstructing dune grasses trimmed.

A fighting spirit, a will to live doing just that."

Cunningham is hoping that some of the scientific research being done on the disease will produce some promising results in the near future. But even if no breakthrough is on the immediate horizon, she still has her joy for life, and a passion for fighting the disease.

"It's just an insidious disease," she said. "Even if doctors and scientists could find a way to make it chronic, and not terminal, I could live with that. But I feel I'm a fighter — nobody's going to ever convince me to see the negative side. My zest for life has gotten me this far. I'm still here, even 11 years after I was first diagnosed. I really feel like I can beat this. I try not to project into the future too much. I believe you have to live in the moment and enjoy your friends and family as much as you can."

Being diagnosed with breast cancer caught her totally off guard. In 1989 when she was living in Canada, her battle with the disease began with a warning sign.

"In November of '89, I found a lump on my breast," she explained. "I was diagnosed with breast cancer that December."

She went through treatment at the time at a hospital in Ontario. She had an operation to remove the lump, and that was followed up with five weeks of radiation treatment and six months of chemotherapy.

"I thought I had a clean bill of health after all of that," she said.

But in 1992, after she and Brandon had moved back to Norwell, Cunningham discovered the lump had returned.

"It came back in the same spot," she said. Cunningham added that after the new lump was found, she went ahead and had a mastectomy (removal of a breast). Despite her situation, she continued to work at her job at the First Early Intervention Program in Weymouth, a place which assists children from birth to 3 years of age who have "developmental delays."

But when 1994 rolled around, so did some more bad news.

"In August of that year, I had a bone scan, and it was discovered that the cancer had gone to my bones," Cunningham said.

At that point, she underwent a procedure called an "oophrectomy" where her ovaries and tubes were removed in order to get all the estrogen out of her body.

"Estrogen is like fuel for the cancer," she explained. A year later, she went on the cancer-battling drug called Tamoxifin and a number of other ones as well.

"I went through a series of different drugs," she said. "But each cancer drug has a certain shelf life — a time limit, sort of. When one drug would stop working, I'd go on another one. The cancer kept coming back."

To make matters worse, in March 1999, doctors discovered Cunningham's cancer had moved to more places in her body. She was put on more chemotherapy as well.

In April of this year, Cunningham had to stop working. She went on disability. Doctors also put her "on a heavy duty chemotherapy" treatment which made her lose her hair. She has also gone through about a half-dozen different radiation treatments, significantly weakening her body.

"I'm basically on chemotherapy for the rest of my life," she said, "that is until a cure is found or a Band-Aid is put on the disease. I also have to go through radiation treatments. That combination of getting the chemotherapy and the radiation has basically wiped my body out. I don't have the energy I used to. I'm very fatigued and I get nauseous quite frequently.

Aside from her medical treatments, Cunningham also works with her brother Bob Barlow, who is an occupational therapy assistant.

"He's given me a program to keep my body parts moving and relatively healthy," she said. One of her other treatments comes in the form of her breast cancer support group at South Shore Hospital in Weymouth which she helped implement five years ago.

"The support group is a tremendous help for me," she said. "I'm able to give support to other women going through the same thing, but I'm also able to share the things I'm going through. I've made some wonderful friends there."

Cunningham said the toughest part about the support group is losing one of its members to breast cancer, but that has not happened in over a year.

"When you see a friend die, it's always very difficult," she said. "And when you see a friend die from the same disease you have, it puts your own mortality right in front of your face. I always think 'that could be me.'"

But Cunningham labels herself as a fighter, and she intends on being around for her friends, her family, and especially Brandon.

"I can't let the smaller things in life bother me," she said, "because I want to make the most of what I have, and that's a lot. But the one thing I have to accept is that this is my life now."

Cohasset title hopes go down with last minute loss in Abington

By T.J. Byrne
CORRESPONDENT

In a game between two teams trying to keep their Super Bowl hopes alive, The Abington Green Wave defeated the Cohasset Skippers last Friday night at Memorial Field. Neither team may make the Super Bowl and it may have only been October, but this game had every bit the excitement, energy and drama that a Super Bowl game should have.

The final score of 36-29, in favor of the Green Wave, was the end result of two teams fighting to stay afloat in the South Shore League title race. The upstart Skippers, who have a league loss to Carver, have improved dramatically and are looking to take their program to the next level. In order for Cohasset to take that next step, they would have to beat Abington, a team they have not gotne the better of since 1992.

The Green Wave, who last week suffered their first loss to Norton since 1992, was looking to rebound and get back on track. A favorite to win the league at the beginning of the season, Abington needed to beat Cohasset and run the table in hopes of sharing a league title.

Cohasset was 2:55 away from upsetting the host Green Wave, at which point they were 68-yards away from suffering their second straight league loss. The table was set for one of the more exciting finishes, with league title implications on the line.

Trailing 29 – 28, the Green Wave start their final drive of the game at their own 32-yard line. Matt Bryan took the first snap, rolled out and connected with Bob Lacerda for 17-yards. Lacerda followed his catch with a 10-yard run, moving Abington to the Skippers' 38-yard line. Bryan rolled out once again, but this time tucked the ball away and scampered for 24-yards. Following a facemask penalty, the Green Wave had a first and goal with under a minute left to play.

Eight plays and 62-yards later, Bryan finished what he began and connected with Tom McSharry for the go ahead touchdown pass. Jason Harrington hauled in Bryan's pass for the two-point conversion and Abington had escaped with a victory.

"That had to be a very good drive by us to win the game and it was," said Abington head coach Jim Keliher. "We had a good night running the ball and Mike came up big when we needed him."

Cohasset, who trailed 20 – 8 and 28 – 14 at certain points, gave the Green Wave all they could handle. The Skippers showed a lot of character in coming back and taking a late 29 – 28 lead.

"I am very proud of our kids tonight," said a disappointed Cohasset coach Tony Rolfe, following the final gun. "Both teams played their hearts out and it is a shame that someone had to lose."

Rick Hall, who has quietly become one of the better all-around players in the league, got Abington on the scoreboard first. After pulling in a Skipper punt at his own 36-yard line, Hall returned it 64-yards for the score. Following Lacerda's two point conversion run, Abington was up 8 – 0.

Cohasset came right back on the following possession. Quarterback Jason Brown hit Chris Bilodeau on the run for a 15-yard touchdown pass. Brown tied the game at 8 – 8 with a run of his own for the two-point conversion.

"This game really showcased a lot of talented players tonight," said Keliher. "Brown and Bryan showed that they are probably two of the best

Field hockey team still rolling along

Girls eye Tuesday re-match with Hanover for league title

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

The Cohasset field hockey team, a startling 9-1-1 on the season, qualified for the state tournament with an exciting 1-1 tie against the perennially strong Aces of Notre Dame Academy.

After a scoreless first half, with neither team budging on defense, Cohasset native Taylor Strecker of Notre Dame broke the ice with a goal. However, in this defensive minded game, the goal did not deflate Cohasset; rather it seemed to inspired them.

Head coach Debbie Bostwick thought the goal was nothing more than a lapse of concentration, as the ball stayed predominantly in Cohasset's attacking end the entire game.

"We dominated and dominated and dominated," reported Bostwick. "And we just let that one slip."

With but five minutes left in the second half, senior Kelly Lordan fed a corner to sophomore Heather Peraino, who fired the ball into the back of the net.

"That [Notre Dame goal] made them really mad," announced Bostwick. "There was no way they were going to settle for a loss."

The final score did not indicate Cohasset's dominance of the game. The Lady Skippers took nine corners, while the defense did not allow Notre Dame one.

Cohasset also out-shot the Aces 12-3. But when they needed to, the Notre Dame defense made its stops, with much of the credit on that front going to their outstanding junior goalie, Katie D'Amore.

"She was awesome," complimented Bostwick. "Another goalie with less experience, and we would have won."

Senior captain Sarah Kidder played extremely well, leading the way with consistent drives and tenacious play.

"Sarah Kidder played a very, very, very strong game," appraised Bostwick.

In Cohasset's most recent game, they embarrassed Hull with a 4-0 thrashing. It was an especially sweet victory because between girls soccer, boys soccer, and now, field hockey, Cohasset has outscored their closest rivals 14-0.

"The girls are not settling for just getting in (the state tourney). Our goal is to finish first in the league."

Cohasset field hockey coach Deb Bostwick

The junior varsity squad also shutout the visiting Pirates, with a 7-0 win.

Senior captain Andi Shaughnessy led the way with a goal and two assists, while Lordan chipped in with a goal and one helper. Peraino also logged another goal, and junior Allison Scott scored her first varsity goal off an assist from senior defenseman Morgan Hurley.

With four key players— seniors Kelly Devine (a captain), Lydia Guild and Maggie O'Connor, and junior Katie Silvia— out with sickness, the Lady Skippers used their whole bench to beat Hull. Junior Jackie Goines stepped into the starting role at defense for Guild, and senior Karen McMorris moved to center midfield in place of Devine.

"Jackie played the entire game, and played very well," effused Bostwick.

"Karen played very well, I rely on her for her speed," the coach added, referring to the standout Spring track performer .

Bostwick was also very impressed with the outstanding play of the self dubbed group of players known as the "B squad."

"It was a great team effort," reported the coach. "We had good support."

Senior goalie Krysten Considine recorded her sixth shutout of the season, a terrific accomplishment through only eleven games. It is a difficult position on this team, but she manages to maintain her concentration even through games where her team dominates the territorial advantage.

"She is doing really well," praised Bostwick. "She is communicating to her team, and being very vocal, even if the action is not there."

With the nine wins, Cohasset has clinched a spot in the state tournament. The Lady Skippers still have six winnable games left on the schedule, including a re-match at home against unbeaten Hanover,

Norwell's Anderson and Camerota dominate opposition, conversation

EXTRA POINTS

with Mike Sullman

So what should we talk about this week coach?

In our recent weekly conversations, Norwell boys' soccer coach John Osgood would like to have highlighted a few of the players on his team other than Jarrod Anderson and Chris Camerota. Really he would have. It's not like there aren't a few others deserving of praise. After all, his team is 11-0; this is obviously more than a two man show.

But what are we supposed to do when Anderson scores 10 goals in three games, including school records for tallies in a half (five) and a game (six), in a 9-2 shellacking Hull on Wednesday? Or when Anderson and Camerota score the two goals in a hard fought 2-1 win over Cohasset on Friday? Or when the two captains each netted a hat trick in Tuesday's 8-2 pummeling of Abington?

Obviously, we have to talk about Chris and Jarrod…again.

"They're just a couple of special players," appraised Osgood.

They're also the top two scorers in the South Shore League. Including Tuesday's stats, Anderson now has 24 goals and five assists, while Camerota is a not too distant second with totals of 12 and eight, respectively.

With four games left in the regular season, Anderson needs just four more goals to eclipse the single season school record for goals set by Ryan Olsen in 1997 with 27. He's certainly on a pace to pull this off, averaging better than two net-finders per game over the first 11 contests.

Wednesday's game against the 1-7-1 Pirates was a laugher, with Norwell blasting the twine seven times in the first half, including the five off the person of Anderson. 'nuf said.

Friday's game with Cohasset, though, was actually just that: a game. The Skippers gave the Clippers all they could handle for the second of their two meetings this year before falling 2-1. Anderson got Norwell on the board in the first half with a big blast from 20 yards out. However, Cohasset notched the equalizer near the 12 minute mark of the second half on a free kick inside the box off of a handball call. Sensing the possibility of knocking off an unbeaten team, as well as a longtime protagonist, the fired up Skippers proceeded to seize and maintain the territorial advantage for much of the remainder of the game.

Much, but not all, and, as it turned out, certainly not enough.

A late push by Norwell resulted in a free kick from 25-yards out. Coach Osgood assigned Camerota to the kick, as he generally does, and the captain, as he generally has, came through with sniper like precision, drilling the ball over the Skippers' wall and into the top left corner of the net. Ball game.

"They just play us extremely tough," said Osgood after the game, of the upstart Skippers. "I wouldn't be surprised if we see them in the tourney, though I hope it will be well down the road."

Tuesday's match up with Abington was actually somewhat competitive… for a half anyway. After early first half tallies from (that's right) Anderson and Camerota, Abington's Mark Sulamonte drilled one past Clippers' keeper John Conlan to send the game into the break at 2-1.

Sulamonte would add another goal in the second half, but not until four more had been wrung up at the other end of the field.

Anderson and Camerota came off the field for the final time around the 15 minute mark in order to keep them fresh and healthy for Thursday's return engagement with the ultra-physical Norton team, who they beat 2-1 in Norton on Sept. 22 on solo tallies from…aw, I don't really have to say it, do I?

The boys next game after that is Tuesday's second go round with perennial arch rival Hanover, who the Clippers surprised with a 6-1 pounding back on Sept. 26 to hand the Indians their only loss of the year. Osgood is wisely anticipating a more difficult time of it in the rematch.

Norwell will then finish up the regular season with a game in Carver on the 19th and a non-league match up on the 27th at home against Hingham.

So the only real questions at this point are: 1) How high a seed will Norwell get in the tourney? 2) Can the Clippers run the table? 3) Will Anderson break the school's single season scoring record? 4) Can coach Osgood get his first state championship after so many great runs and close calls over his 30 year coaching career?

Girls soccer team not getting the breaks

Lady Skippers fall to 1-7-1 despite sound play

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

After a frustrating beginning to the season, not scoring a goal until the fourth game, the girls soccer team has shown considerable improvement over the past few weeks.

Though their record stands at a sub-par 1-7-2 overall, and 1-6-1 in league play, several of these losses could have easily gone their way with a few breaks.

On Friday, the Lady Skippers took on the South Shore leading Norwell squad, a re-match of the game that went decisively the way of the Lady Clippers earlier this season, 3-0. This time around, however, the visiting Cohasset team played them as tough as anyone has in the league before losing 1-0.

But Cohasset can hold their heads up high, even after the loss, because were it not for the booming kick from 30 yards out by Norwell's senior All-Star Margaret Shute, the game might have ended as a tie.

"We played awesome," praised head coach Deb Beal, who also mentioned the closeness of the game, and that one quick shot was the difference.

Prior to Norwell, Cohasset played Norton, finding themselves teetering on the edge of a tie again. However, Norton scored with nine seconds left in the game to break the 2-2 deadlock.

With games being played at a very competitive level, this team, which lost nearly all of its games in 1999 by larger margins, can hardly feel dejected about their win-loss record.

Beal has maintained an optimistic attitude, knowing that with any semblance of luck, the team could get right back on the winning track.

> "Looking ahead at my schedule, they are all winnable games. We could finish with at least seven wins."
> Cohasset girls' soccer coach Deb Beal

"Games we were losing by two or three goals last year, we are only losing by one this year," she reported.

"We are definitely improving," effused junior captain Maggie O'Neill.

To add to the frustration, Cohasset was outmatched in Mashpee last Saturday in a game the girls figured to have a good shot at winning, falling 3-0.

After leaving Cohasset at eight o'clock in the morning, and not playing until noon, the Lady Skippers came out of the gate a bit lifeless, yet still managed to keep Mashpee off the scoreboard in the first half. Unfortunately, a second half offensive flurry by the host Lady Falcons put another "L" on the girls' Won-Loss record.

"We came out very flat," said Beal matter-of-factly. "They were very aggressive, but we were a better skilled team. But they wanted to win more than we did."

"We kind of fell apart on Saturday," echoed O'Neill. "We expected that we were going to win."

O'Neill has led her team with six goals this year, an especially outstanding feat as she has not played any time at forward. Starting the season as a defender, Beal moved O'Neill up to midfield to encourage her offensive strikes.

"Maggie has been stepping up a lot," said Beal.

Tied for second for the team lead in goals are junior Becky Ross and sophomore Molly Flanagan, with two apiece.

Cohasset now looks forward to six beatable opponents, among them league rivals Hull, Mashpee, Chatham (twice) and Carver. Though a .500 season seems a very tall order for the Lady Skippers, Beal once again has looked to the bright side.

"Looking ahead at my schedule, they are all winnable games," reported Beal. "We could finish with at least seven wins."

Seven wins would bring them back to athletic sea level and possibly even a berth in the state tournament.

Shortage of officials becoming big concern for local teams

By Lou Molinari

Something that has been happening for years, may finally have happened.

There's a shortage of high school soccer officials, and the shortage is growing.

According to one high school coach, at least 20 officials retired from the sport last year, leaving the ranks in a very precarious position.

It seems many of the current officials are getting 'up there' in age and there's an alarming lack of young blood available.

"Why would a young kid want to become a soccer official?" Marshfield High boys soccer coach Dennis Lassige posed rhetorically. "Do you realize the fan abuse they have to take while officiating a game? It's not just where the abuse occurs."

Lassige pointed to one young person he knew well who had attempted to become an official but quit rather quickly when fan abuse became too much for that individual to handle.

On the high school level, varsity games require two officials in an ideal situation but can go with one in an emergency. Junior varsity soccer requires one official.

"The shortage isn't something that's just happening," said Lassige. "It's been coming down the road and now it's here."

This problem may well come to the forefront for a lot of the schools who saw games rained out on Monday.

When would the games be replayed?

That question was put to Scituate girls soccer coach Joe Strazdes, whose game with Hanover was rained out Monday.

"It's up to the athletic directors to find out," said Joe. "They have to find out when the officials have open time slots."

Many of the problems arise because a good number of the officials work in various school systems, meaning much of their time is accounted for in advance, making re-scheduling a real horror show.

"We can play the game with one official but it's not ideal," offered Strazde. "There should be an official for both sides of the field."

He added: "Even now, some retired officials are stepping in to officiate."

Lassige stated: "I don't know what the answer is to get more officials. Right now, some leagues are playing on Monday, Wednesday and Friday while others are playing on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday, keeping the available officials very busy.

"The answer isn't night soccer games, when officials would be off from work. It's doubtful the school department would like to see kids playing sports three nights a week during the school week."

Another coach pointed out that he knew of one junior varsity game that had to be postponed so the official scheduled for that game could work the varsity game that had no official.

It was also pointed out that this past Saturday one official worked the Silver Lake-Taunton game.

"We don't have a feeder system for officials and that's a problem," observed Lassige. "The problem is here and a solution is needed."

A number of area coaches, when asked the same questions concerning the shortage of officials, had very similar answers.

Obviously, the burgeoning popularity of soccer in the area that it has outgrown the supply of officials.

"I don't think money is the answer," said Lassige. "I don't know what the answer is, but the shortage is here."

Cohasset's main rival for the South Shore league crown.

"The girls are not settling for just getting in," declared Bostwick. "Our goal is to finish first in the league."

With 18 spots in the tournament, the top nine receive a bye in the first round, and the higher seed a team has, the more it likely it is to gain home field advantage throughout the post-season.

"We'd love to have home field advantage," said Bostwick. We have received wonderful support from the parents and fans."

Hanover recently tied Duxbury, putting themselves one loss away from being tied with the Lady Skippers. So all Cohasset needs to do is continue to cruise along, winning every game it can.

"We are on easy street right now," joked Bostwick. "We just need to all-around quarterbacks in the area."

The Green Wave's following two possessions became instant replays of one another. Both drives ending on 32-yard touchdown runs by Lacerda. Abington failed on both conversion attempts, though, leaving them with a 20 – 8 advantage.

Cohasset cut into the Abington lead before the first half ended. A 36-yard touchdown run by halfback Brian Krupczak closed the gap and the Green Wave had a 20 – 14 halftime lead.

Abington took the opening possession of the second half and marched 45-yards for the score. Bryan's one yard touchdown sneak and two-point conversion sweep gave the Green Wave a 28 – 14 lead. Bryan's scoring followed a 36-yard kick-off return and 30-yard sweep by Hall.

It was Brown's turn to match Bryan's efforts. Before the third quarter ended, Brown connected with Liam Martin for six yards and the touchdown. Brown scampered in for the two-point conversion and Cohasset closed in, but stilled trailed 28 – 22.

A Skipper's drive haulted at the Green Wave 31-yard line. It looked as though Abington would run the clock out, but Cohasset recovered a Green Wave fumble at their own 49-yard line and the drama was about to begin.

Brown raced 30-yards on the first play and the Skippers were at the Abington 20-yard line with just over three minutes left to play. Two plays later, Paul Previte finished the drive off with a one-yard touchdown run. Chris Golden's extra point kick gave the Skippers a late 29 – 28 lead.

"We showed a lot of character tonight," said Rolfe. "Our team never gave up and we are only going to get better from this game."

For the Skippers, Brown went 5-for-8 for 43-yards and one touchdown pass. The senior signal caller also ran for 105 yards on 11 carries. Krupczak contributed a touchdown and 26 carries for 140 yards, giving him well over 600 yards for the season at the mid-way point.

SPORTS NOTES

Cohasset girls basketball sign-up

6th grade, 7th grade, and 8th grade girls may try-out for the Cohasset Traveling Teams. There will be three teams.

The teams wear official Cohasset uniforms, learn high school drills and plays and compete in the multi-town Old Colony League. The teams are tutored by Ellen Carr, Head coach of the Cohasset High School Varsity and Junior Varsity Teams.

Last year our 6th grade team fought from fourth place regular season finish to win the championship. The beat previously unbeaten Braintree in an outstanding game by both teams. All three teams played hard all year long.

Most importantly, all teams gained valuable competitive playing time and learned high school skills and plays.

The teams practice evenings during the week and play games on the weekends, typically home games (at the high school) on Sundays and away games on Saturdays.

For try-out times and more information, call League Coordinator, Dan Belz at 383-0813.

Tennis lesson benefits American Cancer Society

The Cohasset Tennis & Squash Club of Cohasset is hosting a Lessons for Life tennis event to raise money to help fund the search for a cancer cure.

Owner Kathy Pocock and tennis professionals Jan Bickford and John Voikos will host their special event benefiting the American Cancer Society as part of a national program sponsored by the United States Professional Tennis Association. The program begun in 1999, raised more than $55,000 for ACS in its first year. This year's goal is $100,000.

Players of all levels are invited to join the fun at the Cohasset Tennis & Squash Club from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. Saturday, Oct. 21. Instead of paying the tennis professional for the lesson, participants will be asked to make their checks payable to the American Cancer Society. All contributions will be given to a local chapter of the ACS. In addition to on-court instruction, there will be "skill-challenge" events, prizes donated by Wilson Sporting Goods, T-shirts to all donors (first come, first served), and gift certificates from Good Sports Sporting Goods in Cohasset.

A similar event will be hosted by the Hatherly Country Club in Scituate at their tennis courts the same day, same times. Head pro Kent Parrot and other teaching professionals will be on hand.

USPTA is the world's oldest and largest nonprofit organization of tennis-teaching professionals with more than 12,500 members worldwide. American Cancer Society is the association's official charity.

Should police officers man Deer Hill/Osgood school crossing?

Parents want issue revisited

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

If Ripley Road residents, Peter and Donna Pratt, have their way, then uniformed police officers will soon be back manning the school crossing for the Deer Hill and Osgood schools on Sohier Street.

The whole thing started when their son was initially assigned to be a walker this year. The couple was taken aback when they discovered police officers did not cover the school crossing.

And although their son now takes the school bus, the Pratts continue to be concerned that using school personnel instead of trained officers at the crosswalk is a recipe for disaster.

To that end the Pratts circulated a letter and petition addressing what they see is a public safety problem.

"The parents we talked to are nothing short of outraged," Peter Pratt said.

But the school committee said it was reluctant to reopen the issue that was debated back in 1998 when the new Osgood School opened and police crossing guards were removed.

"We went to the advisory committee and selectmen... we went through the proper procedures (to no avail)," chairman Pat Martin said at last week's school committee meeting.

The school department had no money to fund the position, so staff at Deer Hill, including the principal, aides and secretary has served as crossing guards.

"There was always someone out there and it is our belief that no child was ever at risk," Martin said.

But this year the school department hopes to create a part-time position of a crossing guard and will use some of the $50,000 in a recent state METCO grant to pay for it. The additional METCO monies are meant to help reimburse the school system for subsidizing the program that brings Boston schoolchildren to Cohasset schools.

Martin agreed with the Pratts that the school budget goes up and down but said returning to using staff as crossing guards would not be an option the school board would support due to tight staffing.

Peter Pratt said the existing system struck many as a "catch as catch can response" and that the schools were being asked to do a function that was not in their core of expertise.

Martin said she felt a trained crossing guard under the supervision of the building supervisor on site would be a better situation than using police officers because that person could be deployed for other situations such as school plays.

School committee member Chartis Langmaid said the Pratts were free to pursue the issue with selectmen, the town manager and police department.

"We'd be delighted to free the money up for another purpose," she said.

Schools Supt. Edward Malvey said the position will pay $10-$12 an hour and would involve one hour in the morning and one in the afternoon.

"It's a great job for someone who wants to get out and get some fresh air," he said.

In an interview this week, Police Chief Brian Noonan said it would compromise town safety to remove the highway car from its sector for the hour in the morning and afternoon to cover the school crossing.

"To pull a cruiser off for an hour doesn't make sense," he said.

He explained that when an emergency, such as a car accident, occurs the dispatch center would have to notify the schools that the police cruiser had to leave while at the same time dispatching three-to-five fire apparatus and two-to-three police officers.

All the towns in the area use civilian crossing guards. In Hingham the guards are under the supervision of the police department, Noonan said.

Noonan said he would not object to having the money for civilian crossing guards go into the police budget.

"I don't care whose budget it is under," he said. "But it was a bad situation the way it was done (before 1998) and that's why I wrote the letter at the time when the new school opened requesting the schools consider using civilian crossing guards."

Selectmen want school-funded, police supervised civilian guard

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Selectmen recommended Tuesday night that the police department take back control of the school crossing guard position in front of the Osgood and Deer Hill schools on Sohier Street.

Though not yet etched in stone, funding for the position, which had been the lynchpin for chief Brian Noonan, could come from a reduction in the school department's supplementary budget, up for debate at the Oct. 23 special town meeting.

Currently, the schools are slated to receive $300,000 in additional funding. According to Town Manager Mark Haddad, if the school committee gives the okay, the schools will instead receive $292,000, with $8,000 going to the police department to fund the crossing guard position.

Selectmen took up the issue Tuesday night, days after a substantial discussion at the school committee meeting last week resulted in that committee reluctant to revisit the issue.

Though some selectmen didn't want the schools to be responsible for coordinating the school crossing guard position, others didn't want to see a cruiser pulled off the streets during some of the busiest traffic times of the day.

"There are three cruisers on the street at all times, and an average of 15 calls dispatched a day," said Selectman Michael Sullivan. "What are the odds that all three will be needed?"

"Problem is if the police are called away, there's no one there," Selectman Merle Brown countered.

Selectmen chairman Thomas Callahan considered the debate a "public safety issue problem," and said by having it under the police department's budget, it won't be as subject to cuts, as it would under the strained school budget.

Selectman Ronnie McMorris said the town committed a number of years ago to "calming down traffic during commuter hours," and that three cruisers were needed on the streets during that time. She added that the schools were told almost three years ago that once the new Osgood School opened, Noonan was not going to commit an officer to the crossing area.

Staff at the Deer Hill School have been serving as crossing guards.

Boards searching for answers to sewer project overruns averaging out to $33,000 a month, though work was winding up.

"There's less going on, but more cost?" asked Selectman Michael Sullivan. "Something doesn't make sense."

But fellow Selectman Fred Koed, a former water commissioner, said that according to law, it's not up to the contractor to place a police officer on a detail, instead it's the town's public safety officer's call. "It's beyond [Tutela's] control whether to put a cop there," he said.

Town Meeting initially appropriated $13.6 million for the project in 1997. But after the Newtonville and Lily Pond areas were added to the system, project costs jumped to $14.9 million by 1999. Now, with an additional $500,000 looking to be spent, the final project cost is expected to cash out at more than $15 million.

The good news is that, if the authorization is given to spend the money, Vanderweil doesn't think the extra costs will be paid via the town's pockets. He said enough money should be raised through the 1 percent interest rate the commission tacked onto users' betterment fees to cover the debt service.

Regardless, selectmen were stunned to hear that unforeseen costs and overruns had jacked up the price tag so much.

"If you ran a business the way you run this project, you'd be out of business," said Brown.

"I don't see how we can just blow through a $1 million contingency fund," board chairman Thomas Callahan added.

Dan Coughlin, project manager for Tutela, said nearly $800,000 in overruns, change orders, and other extras took a big bite out of the fund. According to Vanderweil and Coughlin, some of the added costs included:

- $334,000 in change orders for the distribution system and sewer plant
- $50,000 for environmental clean-up for a gasoline spill on South Main Street
- $70,000 for a water main replacement on Route 3A
- $206,000 for additional engineering studies
- $80,000 for working around the peat bog on Ripley Road and Smith Place

The bottom line, according to Vanderweil, is that $125,000 is needed to pay out the contracts made with the project's contractors, and "get them out of town," as Town Manager Mark Haddad put it.

However, because the contingency fund has been depleted, the commission said it also needs $375,000 to complete the aesthetic aspect of the project, and fund some extras. A commission hand-out listed:

- $17,000 for screening around the pumping station
- $70,000 for landscaping around the treatment plant
- $100,000 for aesthetic improvements to the plant building exterior
- $30,000 to add a catwalk and other thing inside the plant
- $110,000 to extend the sewer lines to part of Black Horse Lane that had been excluded from the project
- $58,000 in contingency money for overruns

Selectmen mulled over authorizing $600,000 as an insurance that an additional special town meeting wouldn't be needed down the road.

As of press time, Haddad said Nov. 13 had been tentatively scheduled for the special Town Meeting, provided everyone is available.

Tutela owner Domenic Tutela said the project was "rushed" because of a state deadline to install the system and overruns and order changes should have been expected.

But despite Tutela's insistence, some board members left the meeting not feeling fully comfortable with the answers they received.

"We didn't go into the change orders in great detail, and that's where most of the money is," said Callahan afterwards. "Pretty much [we're not satisfied with the answers]. Mark Haddad said he will be looking into the police details to see how that came about. It was requested I guess we have no choice. It just seems like an awful lot."

Is MCAS testing on the ropes?

Class of 2003 — current 10th graders — will be the first class required to pass the language arts and math sections of MCAS exam in order to graduate.

"I'm supportive of the raising the bar and improving education across the Commonwealth but don't put the student in the middle," he said.

The school committee stopped short of signing onto either resolution. Members felt it is unrealistic to expect the state to drop MCAS testing but didn't think the test should be a barrier to keep someone from graduating.

They also pointed out that MCAS started out as a way to evaluate whether schools were doing their job and it has turned into a way to evaluate students.

"It's devolved into whether or not an individual student is doing a good job," Chartis Langmaid said.

The board's consensus was that MCAS is not going away but needs more flexibility with waivers and exceptions so, even if it is linked, it is not a 100 percent requirement for graduation.

The committee delayed taking action on the resolutions until its next meeting. Members hope to receive input from the community in the interim.

Resolution 1

Sponsored by the Arlington School Committee; supported by similar submissions from the Brookline, Shirley and Northampton School Committees.

Whereas Mass. Assoc. of School Committees recognizes the need to set high standards for all students in the Commonwealth and to establish a system of accountability that ensures that all school systems are preparing their students for an increasingly complex world and,

Whereas we believe that the current Mass. Comprehensive Assessment System (MCAS) is seriously flawed,

Therefore be it resolves that the Legislature and/or the Dept. of Education suspend MCAS until such time as the following crucial issues have been addressed:

1. The need to develop a variety of assessment instruments (as described in the 1993 Education Reform Act) so that all students are evaluated fairly.
2. The need to develop additional criteria, so that no single test will determine the fate of a student or the value of a school system.
3. The length of the test and the time it teaks away from teaching and learning
4. The effect on students of the use of the test as graduation requirement (including but not limited to special vocational, education and bilingual students).

Resolution 2

Sponsored by the Amherst-Pelham School Committee; supported by the Amherst, Leverett, Shutesbury, Northampton, Pathfinder, Smith Vocational, Hudson, Arlington and Lincoln-Sudbury School Committees.

Whereas a "high-stakes" testing program will harm students by increasing high school drop-out rates, discouraging other middle and high school students who perform at marginal levels, and unnecessarily frustrating some younger children, especially those with special needs, who are unable to succeed on the challenging MCAS tests, and

Whereas there is inadequate verification that MCAS results distinguish failing performance from performance that needs improvement, and

Whereas there is evidence that states that have implemented education reform without high-stakes testing are having better results in improving academic performance than states that have adopted high-stakes testing,

Therefore be it resolved, that the association opposes the use of a passing grade on the 10th-grade Language Arts and Math MCAS tests as a requirement for graduation from high school, and be it Further resolved that the Mass. Assoc. of School Committees urge the board of Education not to link MCAS results with the granting of high school diplomas and that the association lobby for legislation that will prohibit the use of MCAS results for that purpose.

SCHOOL NOTEBOOK

Cohasset High has 22 AP Scholars

Twenty-two students at Cohasset High School were named AP Scholars by the College Board in recognition of their exceptional achievement on the college-level Advanced Placement Examinations.

Students take AP Examinations in May after completing college-level courses in high school. The College Board recognizes several levels of achievement based on the number of year-long courses and exams (or their equivalent semester-long courses and exams). At Cohasset High School:

Five students qualified for the AP Scholar with Distinction Award by earning an average grade of at least 3.5 on all AP Examinations, and grades of 3 or higher on five or more of these exams. These students are: Mareth Collins-Wooley, Christopher Golden, Jacquelene Kahn, Benjamin Peterson and Brian Tracy.

Seven students qualified for the AP Scholar with Honor Award by earning an average grade of at least 3.25 on all AP Exams taken, and grades of 3 or higher on four or more of these exams. These students are Naomi Ansbergs, Benjamin Bixby, Grace Gardner, Liam O'Donnell, Gregory O'Keeffe, Clara Sceery, and Jessie Zerendow.

Ten students qualified for the AP Scholar Award by completing three or more AP Examinations, with grade of 3 or higher. The AP Scholars are Timothy Bilodeau, Casey Brewer, Dan Duffy, Justin Langham, Kathleen McCarthy, Peter Minnar, Rebecca Moje, Douglas O'Brien, Erik Shea and Caitlin Stansell.

Of this year's award recipients, nine are underclassmen, Timothy Bilodeau, Casey Brewer, Dan Duffy, Justin Langham, Kathleen McCarthy, Douglas O'Brien, Erik Shea, Benjamin Bixby, and Christopher Golden.

Guidance counselor Ann Porter said the number of AP Scholars at CHS doubled over last year from 11 to 22. Ninety-five percent of CHS students taking the exams had qualifying scores. "We don't preclude anyone from taking the exam and doing the coursework," she said.

AP Examinations which students take in May are graded on a 5-point scale (5 is the highest). Most of the nation's colleges and universities award credit and/or placement for grades of 3 or higher.

Freet/Cohasset banks on youth

The Cohasset branch of Fleet Bank presented $500 to the Cohasset After School Program.

The award is part of the bank's "Banking on our Youth" initiative to demonstrate Fleet's commitment to the development of young people in their local communities.

This fall, Fleet Bank branches throughout Massachusetts will award grants up to $1,000 to local organizations committed to youth education, recreation and mentoring.

"The staff at the Cohasset branch are delighted to provide funding to the Cohasset After School Program," said Jane A. Slattery, branch manager, Fleet Bank/Cohasset. "Helping community groups that invest in youth by supporting programs that focus on the healthy development of children of all ages is important to Fleet."

"On behalf of the Cohasset public schools, we appreciate the interest and support of all segments of the community in this generous financial donation to our worthwhile 'KEDS' program," said Edward M. Malvey, Ph.D., superintendent of the Cohasset public schools. Liz Alpert, director of the Cohasset Enrichment Program, said the donation would be used to purchase new games, toys and art supplies for the programs at both the Osgood School and Deer Hill School.

Jane Slattery, right, branch manager of Fleet Bank in Cohasset, presents a Banking on Our Youth grant to school Supt. Edward Malvey and Cohasset enrichment program director Liz Alpert.

Make a Difference Day is Oct. 28

SCHOOL'S IN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

Attention parents, neighbors and friends of the Cohasset Osgood and Deer Hill Schools! Here is an opportunity to show your child another way you can make a difference in their lives! On Saturday, Oct. 28, "Make A Difference Day" will be in full swing at the Joseph Osgood School and the Deer Hill School. Make a Difference Day is a national event sponsored by USA Weekend Magazine in Partnership with the Points of Light Foundation in an effort to show the power of one person to make a difference. This year, there will be plenty of opportunities for parents and students to help out at both schools. Stay tuned for further details on how you can "Make a Difference!"

On Tuesday, Oct. 3, The Cohasset PSO sponsored the first speaker of the 2000-2001 school year. Nancy Mullins-Rindler, spoke to a group of about 75 parents and school officials on "Bullying and Teasing: What every parent should know." Nancy is the director of the Project on Teasing and Bullying at Wellesley College and presented practical suggestions on how to "bully proof" your child. Many of these principles are currently being utilized at the Osgood School. The free workshop was open to the public. Thank you to all who attended, especially to the school officials and bus drivers. It was a great evening and all seemed to enjoy the talk. Look for news of the Activity Committee's second speaker in the spring.

On Monday, Oct. 2, the Osgood Gymnasium was filled with the beat of African drums and traditional tribal dancing. This special presentation by the Bamidele Dancers was made possible by the PSO Curriculum group. All grades were invited to see the performance and a good time was had by all.

The next PSO meeting will be held on Tuesday, Oct. 17 at 7 p.m. Everyone is welcome.

On Thursday, Oct. 19, the School Committee will meet at 7:30 at Cohasset High School. This meeting is televised on cable TV channel 10 for all who are interested.

Make sure to mark your calendars for the METCO Annual dinner being held on Nov. 5 from 3-6p.m. at CHS. This is a great event held each year to give everyone involved a chance to talk and enjoy a wonderful meal together.

Some safety notes to mention. If your child is riding a bike, skateboard, scooter or roller blades, please make sure he or she is wearing a helmet at all times. I know kids think it is not cool or necessary, but the pros definitely outweigh the cons. Also, please remind your children of the proper behavior to use when riding the buses to and from school. With all the obstacles in the way these days, bus drivers have their hands full when driving buses safely through the town Combine that with trying to maintain control of 60-70 children and it becomes a difficult task to manage. Please reread the handbooks that were sent home at the beginning of the year and explain why it is so important to respect and listen to the drivers.

To any parent who is driving to or from school each day, please remember to use caution when entering and exiting the driveways at the Osgood and Deer Hill. Not only do you need to avoid children, the geese are making their presence well known. Also make sure to follow the guidelines for pickup and drop off at both schools as this will help the procedure go smoothly and effectively.

One last item to mention, The Deer Hill Book Fair is being held next week on Oct. 17,18 &19. This is a great way to support the school as well as start some holiday shopping.

Our "Schools In" column is off to a great start. Thank you to all who are getting the information to me. Please send any news, field trip info, school happenings and anything that relates to your school, class or staff member to jenpiep@yahoo.com, 622 CJC Highway or call (781)923-1057. All photos of events or happenings are also welcomed. Also, if anyone has any comments, suggestions or items they would like to see in this column, please pass it along. — Jennifer Piepenbrink

Handgun violence forum benefits from mixed opinions

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Though it didn't happen, all the indicators for a possible powder-keg explosion were there. Last Thursday, proponents and opponents of gun control legislation came together to discuss the merits of the issue at a forum sponsored by the Cohasset branch of Stop Handgun Violence-South Shore.

Despite tempers flaring briefly, the participants, perhaps respectful of the forum's location — St. Stephen's Episcopal Church in Cohasset — remained civil, with speakers using factual and logical reasoning to argue their points, rather than raw, unyielding emotion.

The forum was the second one sponsored by the group, which is dedicated to increased legislative regulations of gun and increased awareness of gun dangers, in an effort to stave off the amount of gun violence in Massachusetts and the country.

"It's part of a process saying, 'We're not going to just accept children's deaths,'" said Amyra O'Connell, one of the South Shore chapter's founders and organizers of the event. She opened the forum by explaining why she, as a mother from "safe" Cohasset would organize an anti-handgun violence group. "There's a sense of outrage," said O'Connell who participated in last May's Million Mom March in Washington D.C. to protest gun violence. "Just because we're from Cohasset, I don't think you should negate us."

One of the featured speakers was John Rosenthal, who along with the late Michael Kennedy of Cohasset, founded SHV. He was proud to say that because of the success the program has had in Massachusetts, it was the model for Americans for Gun Safety, a national organization endorsed by Sen. John McCain, R-Arizona.

"We are the cutting edge, we are the role model," he said to the group. According to Rosenthal, because of programs like SHV and the gun control bill passed by the state legislature in 1998 (Chapter 180), gun violence in the state is sinking at a rate twice faster than the national average.

"In the past six years in Massachusetts, there's been a 50 percent drop in injuries [from guns], 56 percent drop in deaths, and 58 percent drop in accidents," said Rosenthal, an admitted gun-owner and skeet shooter.

He touted Chapter 180's requirements such as required renewable licenses from the town police chief, requiring gun dealers to operate out of a store separate from their house, trigger locks, storage boxes for guns, and mandatory background checks. He also promoted the idea of "responsibility and accountability" for gun owners. "There are some real simple things that can be done [to prevent gun violence in the home]," he said.

Rosenthal put the amount of gun violence in prospective by saying 88 people will wake up today and be killed by a gun. "There's been an average of 30,000-35,000 deaths a year for the past 30 years. More Americans have died from guns in America than in all of the foreign wars combined," he said.

Richard Callahan, a gun dealer from Marlborough, found some common ground with Rosenthal and the SHV by saying "What you are doing is good. I commend you," but took offense to the amount of legislation being placed upon "law-abiding citizens."

"Everyone is concerned. We may dispute the numbers, but we don't want to lose a child [to gun violence]," he said adding, "Don't blame us [gun dealers] as being the devil's advocate."

Callahan gave examples of how state gun regulations conflict with federal laws, saying it resulted in a confusing web of rules placed on people like himself, when in reality not taking guns out of the hands of criminals.

"I have to record each gun I sell out of my shop," he said. "But under Massachusetts law, a person can sell four guns a year [out of their home] without having to do a background check."

He also cited that state law requires guns to be stored in an "adequate storage container" but pointed out that "adequate" was never defined, so a person could be breaking the law and not knowing it.

Callahan promoted education rather than legislation. "We can teach sex education to our children in school. We can teach drug abuse, but it's illegal to teach handgun awareness," he said. "We have to have a program to teach it."

Perhaps the night's most emotional argument came from Peter Flynn, a Braintree resident, who has been on the Quincy police force for 30 years. His argument focused more on the need to protect society from the criminal element more than gun owners. Flynn told the crown of more than 50 people that his father was killed in 1967 during an unarmed robbery by three youths under the age of 18 with a combined record of 47 offenses.

"The problem in our society is letting loose dangerous criminals. Eighteen percent of all murders, 14 percent of all rapes and 57 percent of all robberies are committed by convicted felons loose on the street on probation or on parole or out on early release," he said.

Peggy Chapman, a member of Cohasset's Board of Health and a registered clinical nurse said she is required to ask any patient she sees, if they own guns and if they are stored at home. "It's not always about the criminals. It's about people in pain who aren't mentally capable of making good judgements," she said pointing out in particular troubled adolescents and the elderly population.

The forum also gave candidates running for local office a chance to express their views. Peg Goudy, who represented state Sen. Robert Hedlund, was joined by Hedlund's opponent Jim Cantwell, and state representative candidates Garrett Bradley and Walter Murray. Though Hedlund voted against the 1998 legislation, Goudy said the senator does support effective gun control legislation and is currently working to add a number of amendments on to Chapter 180. She also said Hedlund has sent a letter out to the superintendents in his district asking them to have their students to take a pledge against gun violence.

Cantwell said he supports the right to own a gun, but also supports "responsible gun ownership." He remembered prosecuting a case while working in the Plymouth County District Attorney's office involving a high school student who pulled a rented handgun on another student after a fight over a girl.

Bradley recalled a case in Hull where a family was tied up and their house ransacked by people who mistakenly thought they ran a gun dealership out of their house. He said that is one reason why he supports Chapter 180. "I do support an individual's right to own a gun but not if, one, you're a minor, and two, you're a felon," he said.

Murray was the most anti-gun rights speaker of the night. He said not only does he support gun legislation, he also doesn't support "the definite right to own guns." As a strict interpretationist of the United State Constitution, Murray believes only an organization such as the National Guard should be allowed to own guns.

Afterwards, O'Connell was pleased with the event and happy that opposing views were heard. She said she learned a lot and thought the group might focus more on gun safety rather than restrictions. "That seems to be the one thing everyone agrees on," she said.

LIBRARY CORNER

Museum passes

The following passes are offered to Cohasset residents throughout the year:

- The museum passes available, funded by the Friends of the Library, are The Museum of Fine Arts; Boston Children's Museum; The Computer Museum; John F. Kennedy Library & Museum; The New England Aquarium; The Museum of Science and The Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum.
- Other passes to Plimoth Plantation and to the USS Constitution are available and are a gift of Lucille McLoughlin.
- An information sheet about museums, including addresses, hours and phone numbers is available at the front desk. Call the library 24 hours ahead at 383-1348 to secure passes.

First Application Submitted

On Sept. 22, the Paul Pratt Memorial Library submitted its completed "Letter of Intent" application to the Mass. Board of Library Commissioners (MBLC). This is the first formal step in the process of winning a construction grant to convert the old Osgood School into the new home of Cohasset's Public Library. Other documentation required by the MBCL, as a supplement to the application, were also sent. These included a copy of the Building Program, an update to the library's long-range plan, and certification that the specified designer selection process was followed. The application lists the estimated total eligible project cost at $3,046,212. The state grant is expected to be in the amount of $1.45 million.

The library trustees and director will now start work on the official MBLC Construction Grant application which must be submitted by Jan. 18. Extensive documentation and analysis of every aspect of the project will be required. Panels of grant reviewers are being put together to review applications and make funding recommendations. Each panel will include librarians and trustees who have recently built or renovated their own library, as well as consultants and architects.

Final grant awards are to be announced at the June 7, 2001 meeting of the Mass. Board of Library Commissioners.

IT'S HAPPENING

Harvest supper

A Harvest Supper will be held at Cohasset's Beechwood Congregational Church on Saturday, Oct. 21, at 6:30 p.m. Ham, green beans, harvard beets, coleslaw and potatoes will be served. Following dessert, an auction will be held to benefit the church.

Dinner is $7.99 for adults and $3.50 for children. Seats must be reserved by calling 383-9131.

Olmsted is topic at annual dinner

The Cohasset Historical Society will feature a talk by Allan Banks from The Olmsted National Historic Site during the society's annual meeting and fall dinner Oct. 29 at Kimball's by the Sea.

There will be a social period at 5:30 p.m. with dinner at 6 p.m. The annual meeting of the society including election of new members of the board of directors and its officers will be held before the lecture.

Tickets are $30 for members and $35 for non-members. Attendees should indicate choice of scrod or stuff chicken and checks should be made payable to the Cohasset Historical Society and mailed to 14 Summer St. Call John Horvorka at 383-0766 with questions.

Frederick Law Olmsted is widely recognized as America's premier landscape architect and park maker. He played a significant role in the development of Boston-area parks including World's End in Hingham.

Russian organist at St. Stephen's

As part of its Sunday Concert Series, now in its 10th year, St. Stephen's Church presents Russian organist, Tatiana Tchausova in a recital on Sunday, Oct. 29, at 1 p.m. Tchausova was born in the city of Dnepropetrovsk, a large cultural center in the Ukraine. She is now a professor at the St. Petersburg Conservatory, specializing in organ and musicology, and combines teaching and performing, having performed in Russia, the Baltic countries, Finland, and France.

Included in this concert will be selections of Russian organ music, as well as music of Cesar Franck, on whom Tchausova has done extensive research and dissertation work. This visit is particularly meaningful for St. Stephen's, since through the years, the church's music director, Dr. Fred Guzasky, has gone to St. Petersburg to teach at the conservatory and play recitals; and now, Tchausova, long-time colleague and friend, is coming to the Boston area for a series of recitals, including one at St. Pauls' Cathedral downtown. She is also planning an organ workshop and will be speaking about musical life in Russia. Call the information number concerning these important events.

The church is located at 16 Highland Ave. in Cohasset, with parking available at the village lot near the church and is handicap accessible. Donations will be accepted, and a reception will follow the program For more information, call (781) 383-1083.

Jazz night

The popular Mark Kross Five-Piece Trio, featuring Herb Pomeroy on trumpet, will entertain at a Jazz Night Saturday, Oct. 21, at Wilder Hall, 666 Main St., beginning at 7:30 p.m. The jazz evening is sponsored by the New England Friends' Home in Hingham. Tickets may be obtained by calling 749-3556.

Derby fall fair

The annual Derby Spring Fair has been changed to the Derby Harvest Fair and will be held Saturday, Oct. 14, from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. at the school on Burditt Avenue, rain or shine.

Admission and parking are free.

POLICE BRIEFS

Citizens academy postponed to Jan.

The Citizens Police Academy sponsored by Cohasset police has been postponed until after Jan. 1.

Sgt. Robert Jackson said with the holidays approaching, the ten-week commitment may have been too much for local residents. Police only received two applications.

The classes were slated to start Tuesday, Oct. 10 and would have been conducted from 6-10 p.m. once a week for ten weeks. To be put on the list for the January class, call 383-1055.

Curriculum includes criminal and constitutional law, court procedures, probable cause and elements of crimes, motor vehicle law and accident investigation, firearms and use of force, patrol procedures, traffic enforcement and community policing. Ride-alongs with police officers may also be included.

Minors arrested

Answering a complaint about a loud, unsupervised party on Highland Court, police observed several 30 packs of beer and arrested three minors, Police Chief Brian Noonan said. "Some left the scene prior to the police arrival," he said.

Charged with minors transporting alcohol were: Sean C. Chase, 17, 17 Highland Court; Maureen E. Equi, 17, 27 Wood Way; and Justin S. Langham, 17, 100 Pond St.

Sgt. Robert Jackson said the three teenagers were arraigned on the charges Tuesday in Quincy District Court. Equi and Langham were put in a diversion program and the charge against Chase was continued without a finding for three months. Jackson explained that the charge would be dropped at that time if Chase, who had to pay court costs, stays out of trouble.

Jackson said Equi and Langham must attend a MADD-sponsored program on substance abuse and pay a $50 fee to MADD. The arrests won't appear on their records, Jackson said.

Larceny charge

Police charged two Hull residents with larceny of property valued more than $250 after they allegedly stole a bicycle from a North Main Street home Monday afternoon, Oct. 2.

Arrested were: Jessica M. Kamppila, 18, of 45 E St., and Ryan Peaslee, 20, of 36 Prospect Ave. Peaslee was also charged with operating a motor vehicle negligently as to endanger, speeding and failure to stay within marked lanes.

Police Chief Brian Noonan said police received a call about the stolen bicycle from a witness who said the pickup truck where the bike was placed was leaving the area and was headed toward Hull. Police also received a complaint from a caller who said he was run off the road by the pickup truck.

Cohasset police then notified Hull police who helped in apprehending the suspects after they pulled into a driveway on Jerusalem Road, Noonan said.

WORSHIP NEWS

Sukot in Hingham

Congregation Sha'aray Shalom, 1112 Main St. Hingham will celebrate Sukot on Friday, Oct. 13, with a community-wide program. The activities begin with the second Annual Lulav Shake and Sukah decorating at 5 p.m. Each child will make his or her own Sukah out of a shoebox (please bring a shoebox for each child). Also, everyone will make decorations and decorating the Sukah. There will be paper lulavs and etrogs to make and an opportunity to learn how to shake them on Sukot. Actual lulav shakes will be served, with ice cream and chocolate syrup.

At 6:15 p.m. there will be a pot luck dairy dinner, served in the Sukah (weather permitting). Then, at 7 p.m., there will be the Erev Sukot Service in the sanctuary, with an Oneg Shabbat to follow.

Please bring non-perishable food to add to the collection for the needy. Non-members welcome.

Atlantica enters into partnership with local industries

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

In an effort to use what's available in the community, the Atlantica Restaurant has entered into a formal partnership with two local businesses.

White Cedar Farm off Jerusalem Road and the Cohasset Lobster Pound on Border Street will become the main providers of the restaurant's lobsters and vegetables, the restaurant announced recently.

Erik Stenfors, the manager and head chef at Atlantica, is excited about the venture. A Scituate native and resident, Stenfors admits to being a big seafood fan and is excited about being able to use the town's resources. "We're right on the water. There's nothing more exciting for me than eating seafood right on the water. It's almost like you caught it right there and cooked it."

Though he says there isn't much difference from a classic Maine Lobster and the ones caught in Cohasset Harbor, the local ones might be a bit more saltier, only because of their freshness, and having the saltwater still in them.

Stenfors also said by joining with White Cedar Farms, he expects the restaurant's vegetables to be a much higher quality, giving heirloom tomatoes as an example. "The ones you buy in the store you buy because they're round and evenly shaped and red. What they did was take certain genes out," he explained. "With heirlooms, there's been no genetic mutation, not altered in any way. They produce these ugly but beautiful oversized tomato. But the flavor is absolutely incredible...it's bursting with flavor."

White Cedar Farm, according to owner and operator Alix White, is a three-acre farm that has been in White's family since the 1840's. "We are a consumer supported agricultural farm," explained White. "Customers buy shares in the winter and for 22 weeks we deliver vegetables to homes in Cohasset or out of town."

White said Atlantica contacted her about becoming its supplier at just the right time. "It takes a year to plan, and you need a three month lead time at least heading into dormancy, which is the time you plant for next year," she said. She currently is in discussion with Stefnors over the order for next year. On the order are heirloom tomatoes, different types of fancy lettuces, and various herbs.

White proudly boasts that her garden is purely organic with no chemical pesticides, herbicides or fertilizers used. Instead she uses earth, manure and green manure – a mix of decomposing plants such as buckwheat, and winter rye – and follows a schedule of crop rotation.

"The thing that's fun for me is the chefs ask me for more unusual things to grow, and I like that challenge and like that variety," she said, adding that homeowners tend to be "more timid" in their orders.

The advantage to having vegetables used from her farm, rather than a produce wholesaler, is the freshness. "The food doesn't sit on a shelf. Ours are in your hands within 24 hours," she said. White said it is also possible to have her vegetables out of the ground and on a customer's plate within an hour.

Lobster fanatics – for whom there will be at least nine different lobster selections on Atlantica's new fall menu – will get to experience the crustaceans just hours after being pulled from the waters of Cohasset Harbor. With the Cohasset Lobster Pound, which is located at the Mill River Marine Railway site a brief walk away, the restaurant has agreed to purchase upwards of 500 pounds of lobsters a week from the wholesalers. Both the Atlantica restaurant and the marine railway site are owned by Peter Roy.

Red Lion Inn owner Gerd Ordelheide said his restaurant also has committed to buying lobsters from the Lobster Pound.

Though the pound already sells close to 15,000 pounds of lobster a week, co-owner Tommy Alioto says the pound will place an even bigger demand on the town's lobster fleet – which in this case is a good thing. He said the pound already buys from almost every fisherman at least once in a while, and 20 on a regular basis. The additional request from Atlantica, according to Alioto, is a "good order" and considered it a "fantastic opportunity."

Lisa Dickason, a public relations representative for Atlantica, said the venture with local industry was a way Atlantica could celebrate its first full year in town. "We really wanted to get more involved in the community, " she said. "The first year was learning ground. We did some things very well, but there were some things that needed to be changed."

The announcement was part of the restaurant's kickoff to its new fall menu, which will begin Oct. 13. Among the changes is the addition of lobster as a special at all times.

White proudly boasts that her garden is purely organic with no chemical pesticides, herbicides or fertilizers used. Instead she uses earth, manure and green manure – a mix of decomposing plants such as buckwheat, and winter rye – and follows a schedule of crop rotation.

BUSINESS NOTES

Village workshop

The Cohasset Revitalization Corporation, in partnership with the Town of Cohasset Village Revitalization Task Force, is sponsoring the second in a series of community workshops to develop designs for infrastructure, circulation, and streetscape improvements in Cohasset Village. The workshop will be held on Thursday, Nov. 9 at 7:30 p.m. in the Town Hall auditorium. The Cecil Group, urban landscape design consultants, will give a presentation on various design alternatives for such things as new sidewalks, better parking, improved vehicle and pedestrian access, and associated streetscape design alternatives. Many of the ideas to be presented are derived from the public input received to date on the project.

Harbor Walk

The Cohasset Revitalization Corporation is sponsoring a community workshop to gather community input on the creation of an enhanced Captains' Walk along Cohasset Harbor. The workshop will be held on Wednesday, Nov. 1 at 7:30 p.m. in the Lightkeepers' Residence on Government Island. The goal of the harbor walk proposal is to effectively link the various public and private properties along the harbors edge through the establishment of improved sidewalks and walkways. The enhancement of the existing area can help provide a safer environment for pedestrians and bicyclists; improve harbor viewing areas; enliven the rich maritime history of the waterfront through interactive markings as depicted by the existing Captains' Walk; and provide a clear delineation between pedestrian, bicycle, parking, and vehicle travel along Border Street. The purpose of this workshop is to gather community input and ideas on the extent of improvements the residents would like to see in the Harbor area. Representatives from the Cecil Group, an urban landscape design firm, will help facilitate this workshop.

The CRC and the Town of Cohasset encourage community participation throughout the program to bring needed improvements to the Village and Harbor areas of the community. Questions, ideas, or comments to the CRC and/or the Village Revitalization Task Force of the Town of Cohasset are encouraged. Preliminary designs and ideas are on display at the CRC office at 87 Elm St. (across from Kimball's). Office hours are Monday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday from 10 am–4 p.m.; Tuesday 12– 8 p.m.; and Saturday 9 am–1 p.m. The CRC can also be reached via phone @ 383-2449; fax @ 383-3334, or email at cohrevitalize@aol.com.

Good times down on the farm

Farm Day comes to Audubon's Daniel Webster Sanctuary

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

Saturday is Farm Day in Marshfield.

The Massachusetts Audubon Society opens its Daniel Webster Wildlife Sanctuary this weekend to crafters, musicians and of course, farm animals for a day of family fun.

The event, now in its 18th year, supports the maintenance of the sanctuary which is open to the public daily from dusk to dawn.

"The whole thing about Farm Day is that it supports the wildlife sanctuary — a very important issue. The sanctuary is a resting spot for migrating birds and it's a wintering spot for a lot of those birds too," said Dianne Laxton of the Massachusetts Audubon Society.

Farm Day is a fitting name for the event as the property located off Webster Road was once a working Dairy Farm owned by the Dwyer family.

In 1982, concerned the former farm could fall into a developers hands, a local conservation group called the Committee to Preserve Dwyer Farm organized the first Farm Day.

"It's a unique event with a down home country feeling."
Dianne Laxton of the Massachusetts Audubon Society

"That committee started holding a smaller version of farm day on that property," Laxton explained. Within a couple of years, the group won the backing of the Audubon Society.

Not only did the society get involved with the preservation of the property, Laxton said in 1984—Audubon purchased it.

Today, it offers nature lovers a wonderful retreat to observe birds and other wild life or walk its long and winding trails. This weekend the sanctuary will be alive with the sounds of music with live entertainment, craft tents, hayrides, and many children's activities.

"There's always something for everybody," said Laxton. "It's always a very popular event, and just a great day to spend with the family." She added 3,500 people are expected to attend this year's event.

"It's a unique event with a down home country feeling," she said.

Laxton said there will be more than 30 craft vendors at the fair selling and handcrafting items including wreaths, bead jewelry, quilts, paintings, wooden crafts, sentimental scrapbooks, miniature clay collectibles, stained

Lizzie's legend

Infamous Fall River murder comes to Company Theatre stage

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

The old playground rhyme tells some of the story. "Lizzie Borden took an axe and gave her mother 40 whacks. And when she saw what she had done, she gave her father 41."

Just in time for the Halloween season, the Company Theatre in Norwell wants to dig deeper and bring the story of the brutal and controversial Fall River murder to its stage. The opening of the original production "Lizzie of Fall River" is set for Oct. 13. The show, co-written and directed by Weymouth resident Steve Dooner will run through Oct. 29.

For those unfamiliar with the story, it dates back to 1892, when Andrew and Abby Borden were found brutally murdered in their Fall River home. Investigators determined that the murder weapon was an axe, which had been used on both victims repeatedly. The Borden's daughter Lizzie was suspected and later accused of the crime, but was eventually acquitted. To this day the murder remains unsolved. But the story surrounding the event has passed through the ages and has become in a sense, a piece of popular folklore. It was a story that the theater group decided had to be told again on stage.

"A year ago, The Company Theatre decided that they wanted to put on a show about Lizzie Borden," Dooner said. "In short, they asked me to take a crack at writing the script for the production."

Dooner is not an active member of The Company Theatre, but he noted he works with them from time to time including his work last year with the theater's production of Dracula. Marc Sangini co-wrote the script for "Lizzie," Dooner said.

Initially the members of The Company Theatre — Zoe Bradford, Jordie Sauerteig, and Michael Joseph —wanted to put on a production using one of the many Lizzie Borden scripts which were already available. But that thought faded out quickly in Dooner's mind.

"As I looked through the existing Lizzie Borden scripts, I was disappointed," Dooner added. "They just didn't do it for me. I wanted to capture the right atmosphere—one that eerie and mysterious. None of the existing scripts really captured those feelings."

In order to write the script, Dooner did a great deal of research. He found that most of the existing plays dealt with the trial of Lizzie Borden. Dooner said his script, unlike any of the others, is based on Borden's actual testimony at the Fall River police station after the murders were committed.

"That was the stuff that never came to light," Dooner said of the testimony transcripts. "It was great as a foundation for the play because it really reflected Lizzie in her own words. I used the lost words of Lizzie Borden and I think that made the script very chilling. Using the testimony also allowed me to use a number of interesting flashback sequences in the production."

"When people see this play, they're going to feel different things about Lizzie. They'll feel sorry for her on one hand, but on the other hand, they'll say 'how could she do something like that?'"
Actress Lauren Grove

The final result completed in August was one that both Dooner and theatre members were thoroughly pleased with.

"After we read the script, we had an exact vision of how Lizzie should be," Bradford said. Bradford noted the members of The Company

Ready to buy your first home?

By Kathleen Zigmont
CORRESPONDENT

For Neil and Patty MacDonald of Weymouth, deciding to buy their first home was a gradual process.

"It was something we knew we wanted to do eventually, but it took us a while to be ready to do it, both financially and otherwise," said Neil MacDonald.

"We didn't have any set timetable, but when we were ready, we knew it," he said.

Deciding when to buy a home is a very personal decision, and varies from person to person, couple to couple.

Some people strive for a home as soon as they get their first job, scrimping and saving for the down payment; others, like the MacDonalds, wait a few years until they feel "ready."

Patty MacDonald said she and her husband, who had been married for six years before they bought their North Weymouth colonial-style home late last year, waited for several reasons.

"We weren't sure of where we wanted to live, or what we wanted in a home. And since we didn't have any kids yet, I think we wanted do some traveling, live a little before we settled down into the financial obligations of a home," said MacDonald, who is expecting the couple's first child.

"We knew financially, our decision to wait may not have been very sound, but we felt we had good reasons to wait and we're glad we did," she said.

Experts say, though, whenever possible, it's nearly always better financially to take the plunge sooner rather than later.

How to buy a standing mixer

A standing electric mixer is perhaps the most expensive and important small appliance one can purchase, and the price ranges from about $100 to $400. A good one can handle almost twice the flour of a lesser model and is also significantly better at dealing with a stiff cookie or bread dough. The question is, which one to buy?

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

To make that determination, I decided to perform five different tests on each of five different machines. I whipped one cup of heavy cream, beat three egg whites, made a cake batter, creamed butter and sugar to make a cookie dough, and then made a simple bread recipe to see how each machine would stand up to some heavy lifting. I took careful notes on the volume and consistency of the whipped cream and egg whites, how well the eggs were beaten and the butter creamed, the difficulty of adding dry ingredients (some machines gave me a minitacial when flour was added), how stable each machine was during the tests, and how well the motors stood up to the tougher cookie and bread doughs.

The five machines I selected for testing ran the gamut from the expensive ($400) to the cheap ($100). (Note that model numbers and prices change frequently.)

• KitchenAid K5SS, $370, 10 speeds: This is the larger of the two KitchenAid mixers, with a five-quart capacity bowl and many available attachments. The mixer is engaged by raising and lowering the bowl, not by raising the head of the mixer with the beaters. The beaters move in an elliptical path in a stationary bowl, a method that incorporates ingredients nicely, although dry ingredients such as flour tend to jump back out of the bowl unless the speed is turned to low or the mixer turned off entirely. (A splashguard is available as an accessory.) The mixer comes with a flat paddle, a whisk, and a dough hook. In my tests, I found that this mixer should not be used with more than nine cups of flour.

• KitchenAid K45SS, $270, 10 speeds: This is the little sister to the above mixer. The capacity is 4 1/2 quarts and, unlike the large model, the top portion of the mixer, along with the beaters, tilts upward when you want to add ingredients or remove the bowl. This mixer comes with the same attachments and also offers a wide range of accessories, although these are somewhat more limited than those that come with the bigger model. This smaller mixer uses the same motion to move the beaters around the bowl and worked best with no more than seven cups of flour.

• Krups Power Mix Pro Metal 610, $100, 3 speeds: This mixer is very lightweight compared with the KitchenAid models and is the only model tested that comes with a plastic bowl. It also includes two beaters and a dough attachment. It uses a rotating bowl as well as moving beaters to incorporate ingredients-the only mixer to use both methods. This mixer did not perform well with anything more than five cups of flour. (This model has since been replaced by Model 613, which costs $150. I did not test the newer version. It comes with a metal bowl instead of plastic.)

• Hamilton Beach 60690, $130, 12 speeds: This is a medium-weight mixer with a tilting top, two beaters, and a dough hook attachment. It has stationary beaters and a revolving bowl, the sides of which must be scraped down quite often. This mixer can handle no more than six cups of flour.

• Sunbeam MixMaster 2359, $160, 12 speeds: This is another medium-weight mixer with a tilting top, two beaters, and a dough hook. It also has a revolving bowl and stationary beaters requiring multiple stops to scrape the sides of the bowl. For its weight, this mixer was quite unstable. Anything beyond five cups of flour made it dance across the counter.

The results were clear. Both KitchenAid models performed extremely well across the board with excellent or "very good" marks in all categories. The Krups did fine with the egg whites but received only "fair" ratings in all other categories. The Hamilton Beach did a decent job with the whipped cream and egg whites but received only fair marks with cake batter and cookie dough and did a poor job with the bread dough. The Sunbeam did a good job of whipping cream but received poor marks on everything else. In addition, I found that the less expensive models tended to be unstable during mixing cookie or bread dough.

So KitchenAid was the winner, but which model should you choose? The larger machine has 25 extra watts of power and more capacity, but I find the smaller model a bit easier to use since the head pivots up and away from the bowl, making for easy access. Your choice will therefore depend on whether you can make do by working with seven cups of flour at a time-the limit of the smaller machine) or need a bowl with nine cups of capacity.

Out of curiosity, after testing these five familiar models, I bought and tested the $400 Magic Mill mixer, a legend among baking fanatics. The metal bowl, which is huge, turns on a stand. A spring-loaded arm extends out into the bowl and a roller hangs down from it, turning against the side of the bowl as it moves. The batter is pressed between this roller and the bowl, which is how the mixing process works. In addition, a stiff rubber spatula is positioned against the bowl (this is truly a great idea), scraping the batter off the sides of the bowl as it turns. The machine also comes with an dough hook that remains stationary as the bowl rotates and a plastic bowl with a set of small beaters to be used for whipping egg whites. This mixer is huge, heavy, and worthy of being included in the permanent collection of the Museum of Modern Art.

That being said, I do not recommend that most home cooks purchase one. This is only for folks who engage in serious baking and regularly need to work with more than six cups of flour at a time. Whipping two or three egg whites, for example, is a hopeless task, much better performed with an electric handheld mixer. And three or four cups of flour get completely lost in the gargantuan metal bowl, a bit like seeing only six wildebeests on the Serengeti. However, if you make a lot of homemade bread or are inclined to large quantities, this is the machine for you. No dough is too stiff, no quantity too large.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 11

It may take a while for the morning fog to burn off. The moon travels at the tail end of the zodiac until 3:51 p.m. No major planetary activity occurs. Try to take extra time out for quiet relaxation, meditation. Influences turn around completely at 3:51 p.m., when the moon enters energetic Aries, and the final windup to this month's full moon begins.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 12

A full moon buildup makes this a day to get things done. Roll up your sleeves and take on a full agenda. You can be most productive, if you have a clear plan of action and stick to it. The Aries moon forms easy contacts to Pluto, Jupiter in the morning and Uranus in the evening. On the other hand, people may be irritable, impatient, argumentative. Don't rock the boat in business or romance. You can let off steam by exercising or enjoying favorite sports.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 13

The second Jupiter/Pluto opposition this year occurs at 4:24 a.m. The full moon culminates at 4:53 a.m., 20-degrees of Aries/Libra. At this time the Aries moon becomes inactive until 10:06 p.m. This is a day to follow through on projects already begun, tie up loose ends. Don't start anything new. A Taurus moon at 10:06 p.m. brings an opportunity to kick back, relax and unwind.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 14

The combination of a Taurus moon and Neptune station set the stage for a pleasant weekend. Take a vacation from business or career concerns; chill out and recharge your batteries. Seek a creative or romantic outlet for your energies. Follow your intuition; your instincts are on target. Pay attention to your dreams.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 15

The planet Neptune takes center stage today. At 10:12 a.m. Neptune begins direct travel at 4-degrees of Aquarius. Neptune's influence aids all creative projects, artistic endeavors. You can gain new insight and find fresh inspiration. The moon continues to travel in Taurus, making this day prime for relaxing and enjoying favorite friends and pastimes.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 16

The planet Mercury turns retrograde midweek. Allow extra time to get where you are going, have an alternate plan of action. There are likely to be unexpected setbacks, obstacles, breakdowns. Today the Taurus moon becomes inactive at 2:17 a.m. until 2:19 a.m., when it enters Gemini. You must carefully organize your time and stick to your plan in order to avoid spinning your wheels. Choose your words carefully between 7:13-10:13 p.m., when a polarity of the moon and Pluto occurs. Don't say more than you have to. Know when it's time to call it a night.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 17

Gear up for a hectic day. Don't take on more than you can handle. The Gemini moon aligns with Mars at 11:10 a.m. cautioning you to stop, look and listen. Avoid taking chances or doing anything risky. If you are working, handle a variety of small jobs rather than one major undertaking. This can be a fun day, great for socializing. On other hand, if you have a busy agenda, it can be most frustrating and difficult to get things done.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 18

Be sure to start this day with an upbeat, easygoing attitude. The moon enters emotional Cancer at 5:37 a.m. Mercury actually begins retrograde travel at 9:41 a.m., 16-degrees of Scorpio. Mercury will travel in retrograde motion until November 7, bringing a time for a change of pace and priorities. Focus on inner, personal growth rather than trying to forge ahead and make dramatic changes in your external life. A polarity of Venus/Saturn urges you to face your fears and put recent losses, crises behind you.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 19

The planet Venus moves into Sagittarius at 2:18 a.m., remaining there until November 12. Open the doors to a higher level of communication with loved ones. Be more nurturing and supportive. The moon travels in the sign Cancer. Influences today are ideal for tackling jobs that need repair or renovation. Plan a quiet evening. Meditate for inner peace and vision.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 20

The last quarter phase of the moon occurs at 3:59 a.m. Next Friday, October 27, the Scorpio new moon will culminate. Today the Cancer moon becomes inactive at 8:15 a.m. until 8:42 a.m., when a Leo moon takes over. Overall, people will be outgoing, optimistic. Between 8:42-11:34 a.m. you can make gains developing projects that need moral or financial support from others. A lunar opposition to dreamy Neptune at 3:11 p.m. urges you to pay extra attention to details in order to avoid making careless errors. The afternoon and evening rate high for fun and games. Kick back and go for the good times.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 21

A Leo moon continues to generate an upbeat mood today. Avoid rigid time schedules; go with the flow. An applying alignment of Venus and Neptune highlights creative pursuits. Tackle old, abandoned projects; you will see them in a new light, find new energy and enthusiasm to finish them. Romance is in the air this evening. All social activities get the green light.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 22

This day has its challenges. A positive attitude is your ace in the hole. You may experience delays, obstacles, reversals. Allow extra time and go with the flow. The Leo moon forms a challenging 90-degree alignment to Saturn at 11:12 a.m., when it becomes inactive. A Virgo moon takes over at 11:52 a.m. If you have work projects to accomplish, you can get them out of the way this afternoon. Plan to catch up on reading, studying, correspondence. The sun enters Scorpio at 10:48 p.m., remaining there until November 21.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 23

Start this day with a peaceful, positive attitude. A lunar alignment to Pluto may spark emotional thunderstorms. Choose your words carefully. The moon travels in Virgo all day. Because the sign Virgo is ruled by the planet Mercury, there may be incidents of mechanical/electrical breakdown. Projects can take unexpected turns. Avoid rigid time schedules. You can be productive if you focus on jobs that redoing, repair, follow through.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 24

Roll up your sleeves and plan to get a lot accomplished today. Focus on jobs you've been putting off and get them out of the way. Clean out desk drawers and closets. Get back on track with diets, exercise and physical fitness programs. The moon continues to travel in meticulous Virgo, active until 2:34 p.m., when it aligns with Saturn. At 3:30 p.m. the moon enters Libra. Lunar alignments to Neptune and Venus set the stage for romance. Plan a quiet evening with the love in your life.

A love of the business

Jeff Bridges picks up on his father's joy of acting

By Ed Symkus
CNC SENIOR ARTS WRITER

Few actors have had more eclectic careers. Jeff Bridges made his first professional appearance at the age of — depending who you ask — either 4 or 6 months when he was literally carried on in a forgettable Jane Greer film called "The Company She Keeps." At the age of either 7 or 8 he had a few small roles on his dad, Lloyd's, popular TV show "Sea Hunt." As an adult, he's played a video game character in "Tron," a lounge pianist in "The Fabulous Baker Boys," an auto maker in "Tucker: The Man and His Dream," a plane crash survivor in "Fearless," an extraterrestrial in "Starman" and a burned-out stoner in "The Big Lebowski," among many other roles.

In his newest, "The Contender," he takes on a very different role: the president of the United States. But it's all the same to Bridges, an affable fellow who loves his work and loves to talk about it.

"I prepared for this one the same way as the others," he says. "You look at the script and find out what other characters are saying about your character, and what your character is saying about himself, then you kind of fill in between the lines on those things."

Bridges, who is 50, also likes to maintain a delicate balance about just how much of himself he lends to his roles.

"Occasionally there'll be some improvisation in there," he says. "But when you've got a screenplay that's working, you want to stick with those words. One reason I like doing that is because it removes it from yourself. You're playing another character and somebody else is writing those words, so it's not coming from you. You know, it's adding another element, besides yourself. But you are seeing different aspects of me in my performances. That's the next step after looking at the script. You look inside yourself and figure out what parts of your personality you want to use or what parts you want to shove aside."

Bridges freely admits that it's not just the love of his work, but also the ethic he practices, that can be traced back to ideas that were presented to him by his father.

"I kind of got thrown into acting," he admits. "I'm a product of nepotism. You know, one of the hardest parts of the business is getting your foot in the door, and that was kind of handled by my dad.

"He taught me all the basics," he continues, running his hand through his hair, and closing his eyes for just a moment, thinking back. "I remember him sitting me on his bed when we were doing 'Sea Hunt' and saying, 'Now it's got to be like you're saying this for the first time. And it's important that you're listening to me. And the way I say it changes the way you say it. Try all these different ways — go out of the room and then come back in and do the scene this way.' But what made the biggest impact on me was nothing that he really said to me, but just how he behaved, how he approached his work, with such joy. He loved the whole process. And it was contagious. When he'd come on a set, everybody would just kind of lift up and say, 'Hey, this guy really digs what he's doing, and hey, I kind of dig what I'm doing, too.' He included everybody in on the experience. And I try to bring that into my work as well."

But it wasn't always that way. Bridges says that, to this day, when he finishes a film, he's just drained of energy. Early on, though, that tiredness often led him to think that maybe he wasn't in the right business.

"I didn't know I wanted to be doing this until kind of late in my career," he says. "I had just finished a film called 'The Last American Hero.' And I was exhausted and sort of tired of pretending. You know, I just wanted to be myself and relax and get out of this other character. And I kind of thought, 'I don't know if I ever want to do this again.' But then my agent called me up and said John Frankenheimer wanted to hire me for 'The Iceman Cometh' with Frederic March and Robert Ryan and Lee Marvin, and they were starting rehearsals in about a week. But before he even got that out I said, 'Nah, I'm too bushed.' He said, 'Are you sure?' I said, 'Yeah, too bushed. Pass.' A few hours later Lamont Johnson, director of 'The Last American Hero,' called me and just read me the riot act. 'You call yourself an actor? This is shameful!' And I thought about it and figured, well maybe this is a good opportunity for me to explore the idea of taking this a little more seriously, and being a professional. Let's see what happens when I do something that I don't feel like doing. And I had a great time working on it and learned a lot from the other actors, and I said, 'Yeah, I can do this for the rest of my life.' "

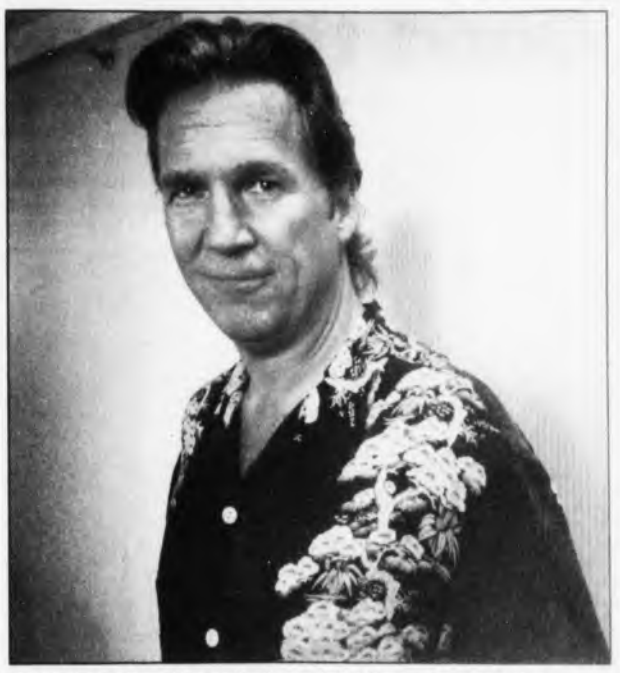
Bridges calls working opposite British actor Gary Oldman, a major heel of a congressman in "The Contender," with a perfect American accent and a fright wig, both wonderful and exciting.

"It's like playing a game of tennis or something," he says. "When you play against somebody who plays well, your game elevates. Same thing with acting."

And he's thrilled that between acting assignments, he's always found time to get back to his first love, music. His freshman album, "Be Here Soon," was recently released on Ramp Records.

"I miss the '60s," he says. "All that innocence and all those open doors. The older you get, you keep learning stuff but some doors close. But I feel sort of the same now. I guess I can't be as capricious as I was back then, but I love what I'm doing now. And it's wonderful to augment it with the music. That was very big for me back in the '60s with all the great groups we had. And I was making my own music then, too. I had this group of friends from high school, and maybe up till about 15 years ago we met every Wednesday night and jammed. No songs allowed; just jamming and improvising lyrics. It was like a poker game but instead of poker, we just jammed."

"The Contender" opens nationally on Oct. 13.



"I kind of got thrown into acting," says Jeff Bridges. "I'm a product of nepotism."

Lizzie's legend

Theatre served as producers rather than their usual roles as directors. "And the script is fantastic—it really leaves people with a menacing ending, but definitely not a conclusive ending regarding what happened in that house."

Bradford said her colleagues and Dooner all wanted to replicate the feelings and atmospheres of the Borden household for the production. That's why she and Dooner and some cast members took a "field trip" to the actual Borden home in Fall River. Bradford said historical officials in the city allowed the group to spend about 90 minutes in the house. And what's more, the cast members who went on the trip dressed up in costume for the excursion.

"It was creepy," Bradford said. "We dressed up some people in character, including Lauren Grove who plays the role of Lizzie. At that point, we all realized how real the story actually was."

"At one point I was standing in the guest room where Lizzie's (mother) was murdered," Grove said. "I was dressed as Lizzie, and I was even holding an axe we brought along for the trip. I looked over at (Bradford) and said 'Alright, this is getting a little bit too real.'"

Grove said she jumped at the chance to play the role of Borden because she has always been a person she's been fascinated with, and the story of the murders always intrigued her.

"There's so many parts to Lizzie that not many people know about," Grove said. "On one hand, she was a gentile, proper woman. But if something infuriated her, she'd go off the deep end. Her personality was very complex, so that was something that was challenging to capture as an actor."

"Lizzie was a very complex character," Dooner said. "And this play shows her in a number of different lights—five years before the murders, and after the murders as well. I think (Grove) did a tremendous job in bringing her back to life."

"When people see this play, they're going to feel different things about Lizzie," Grove said. "They'll feel sorry for her on one hand, but on the other hand, they'll say 'how could she do something like that?'"

"My play allows the Lizzie Borden mystery to expand," Dooner said. "People will find that the story is a complex series of boxes within boxes. There's almost no easy shortcut to the actual answer."

For more information on the play call The Company Theatre at (781) 871-2787 or log onto their website at www.companytheatre.com.

glass, greeting cards, and photos.

Other craft-oriented organizations who will be present at the event include the Plymouth County Beekeepers Association, face painting groups, a herring run guild, and a spinning guild.

Music will be provided throughout the day by a Boston-area blues band called Whose Muddy Shoes and other musicians who headline at the South Shore Folk Music Club in Kingston.

"People who come to Farm Day will have good music to groove to," said Ellyn Einhorn, the education coordinator at the Marshfield Audubon Society. "We usually have more folky-type bands playing, so the blues thing is a departure for us. I think people will be surprised, but I'm sure they'll like it."

Laxton said there will also be food available at the event—from snacks and goodies to homemade soups.

"I've never displayed anything (crafts) there, but I've always loved going to Farm Day," said Ellen Joyce, a scrapbook maker from Marshfield. She will be doing scrapbook presentations at the event. "I've seen my children have so much fun there over the years, and it's just a good time overall. You always bump into friends there."

Nancy Wheeler, a watercolor artist from Scituate, has been displaying her art at the event for the past five years.

"It's a beautiful spot for a fair," she said. "I've always enjoyed going. One thing I like is that it's only a one-day thing—a lot of things like this get drawn out."

Since its start in the early 1980s, the event has become bigger and better each year. The many local people who volunteer to help organize and run the event make it possible to put on Farm Day each October.

"Farm Day has grown tremendously," Laxton said. "We have almost 100 volunteers who help us with it every year. We couldn't do this without them." This year, there are about 80 volunteers helping out and Laxton said the group is always looking for more help from the community.

"This is a huge event for the South Shore community," Einhorn said. "And it's gotten pretty well established over all these years. It's about preserving the sanctuary, but it's also about putting a large array of local talent on display."

For more information on Farm Day, call the Audubon Society at (781) 837-9400. Admission to Farm Day is $3. Children under four can get in free. The rain date for Farm Day is Oct. 15.

SOUTH SHORE REAL ESTATE

Parents seek to recover down payment

BY ANTHONY SUMMERS

ANTHONY SUMMERS

There is virtually no way a young couple can fulfill the American Dream of home ownership without some down-payment help, usually from a parent. However, parental beneficence may be regretted if the young lovebirds turn into battling blue jays. The unpleasant picture of a family unraveling is reported in the Housing Court case of Audette v. Audette and Nunes.

Background

Michael and Judith Audette were young marrieds living in his house at 455 Chase Road, Dartmouth. His parents, Joseph and Jeanette Audette, had loaned their son the down payment and had taken back a second mortgage to secure the loan.

Having difficulty supporting his family, Michael Audette moved to Florida to find employment. Sadly, it didn't take long before George Nunes moved in with Judith Audette. All this was going on while nobody was paying either the local bank's first mortgage or the mortgage to Audette's parents.

The heat was turned up when the local bank commenced foreclosure. In an effort to protect both their loan and their son, the Audettes brought the first mortgage current and began making the monthly payments. Predictably, Judith Audette's behavior became totally unacceptable, and her husband finally conveyed the home to his parents, who immediately, on June 7, 2000, served their daughter-in-law and Nunes with a notice of termination of tenancy which contained a demand that the house be vacated on July 6, 30 days after the date of service. As you may have guessed, Judith Audette and Nunes hunkered down, and therefore the Audette parents commenced a summary process action seeking possession of the house.

Discussion of law

In this case, Judith Audette was clearly a tenant at will. Nunes was a different situation. She had occupied the house with the consent of the owner, Michael Audette, and although she was never a rent payer, her tenancy is governed under the Massachusetts tenancy at will statute, Chapter 186, Sec. 13. On the other hand, since Nunes never occupied the home with Audette's consent, he was considered a tenant at sufferance, without the same statutory protection as Judith Audette..

The deed by Michael Audette to his parents will not terminate Judith Audette's tenancy at will. Termination under the statute requires at least 30 days notice with the 30 days covering at least one complete rental period. In this case, the law presumes the rental period to commence on the first of the month

Decision

In the law, it is always better to be safe than sorry. The notice served on June 7, 2000, mistakenly attempted to terminate her occupancy as of July 6, 2000. Under the law, a June 7 service could not terminate the tenancy prior to July 31, 2000. (Remember the notice must cover at least one full rental period.) Therefore, the Housing Court action, begun July 10, 2000, was defective and must be dismissed against her. However, since Nunes was never a tenant with Audette's consent, he does not have the benefit of the statute and will be subject to the summary process action for possession.

Legal advice

Imagine the frustration of the elder Audettes who are paying the mortgage on the house being occupied by their daughter-in-law and her boyfriend. And to add insult to

IN BRIEF

Moy Lopez named top producer

Conway Financial Services recently honored Moy Lopez for handling the most loan originations for the company during the first six months of the year.

CFS President Carol Bulman and Vice President Rosemary O'Neil presented the award at Jack Conway & Co.'s mid-year awards breakfast, held at the Plymouth Sheraton.

"Moy is consistently among the top achievers on our team," Bulman said. "He is committed to providing borrowers with the best service possible, and that's one of the reasons for his success."

Lopez lives in Hanover and originates mortgages in Brockton, Bridgewater, Whitman, Canton and surrounding communities.

Norwell-based Conway Financial Services, a mortgage brokerage firm owned by Jack Conway & Co., maintains correspondent lending relationships with some of the nation's top mortgage lenders and originates a full line of mortgage products.

Crescent Realty welcomes Perrotta

At a recent sales meeting, Michael Richardson, president Crescent Realty, announced the association of a new sales associate, Ben Perrotta. In his welcoming remarks, Richardson praised Perrotta for outstanding performance at his previous office and for the fine reputation he has earned in the real estate industry.

Perrotta resides in Pembroke with wife Tara and son Nicholas, 19 months old.

Crescent Realty Group is a full-service real estate company serving the entire South Shore.

Tom LaGrasta joins Conway's Bridgewater office

A sales associate, LaGrasta completed the Conway College of Real Estate Knowledge, an intensive, two-week education program that provides licensed agents with advanced instruction in the practical aspects of selling real estate.

LaGrasta currently works for the Bridgewater Police Department and was an independent private investigator for seven years. He is also active with the Bridgewater Business Association and the Bridgewater Police Association, and holds a bachelor's degree in criminal justice from Curry College.

He said he joined Conway because of the firm's ethical treatment of customers and brokers, as well as its comprehensive training program.

ownership is often the biggest, and most lasting, investment anyone can make. Haraden said some of the financial advantages are:

- Housing tends to appreciate in value for decades. Monthly mortgage payments become a form of savings, allowing you to build up equity in your home.
- Numerous tax advantages are available to homeowners. Your mortgage interest is deductible, which can often make owning a home cheaper than renting when you consider "after-tax" dollars. Your property taxes are also deductible.
- Under specified conditions, you may deduct a portion of your housing expenses if you have a home office.
- By building equity in your home, you can move up to a larger property in the future with a good down payment in hand.
- Home ownership makes your housing costs more predictable, particularly if you have a fixed-rate mortgage, which remains the same over the terms of the loan. Rental payments fluctuate at the landlord's will.

According to Quincy financial planner Daniel Kochis, potential home buyers must lay some groundwork before they delve into the world of home ownership.

"Buying a home has never been easier, and the process has never been more streamlined. But there are some things to consider before applying for the mortgage or even looking at homes," he said.

Kochis said he advises that potential homeowners consider their credit history, down payment availability and the amount they can pay monthly for a mortgage.

"People can look up their credit history easily on their own. It's an important part of a homeowner's ability to obtain a mortgage," he said.

Kochis said red flags in a credit history can often be repaired before a mortgage is applied for. "It's a way to go into the process with a clean slate," he said.

In addition, potential homeowners should know their financial limitations.

"You should have an idea of what you can realistically afford. There are tables out there to calculate the costs. Always be conservative; don't max yourself out," he said.

Neil MacDonald said that while his adventure in home ownership may have been a long time in the making, it was worth the wait.

"It pays off in a lot of ways, and not just financially. We now feel part of a stable neighborhood. We know where we'll be in 10 years," he said.

Bulbs, the miracles of spring

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

PART 1

Each year, in late September, a delightful surprise appears in the plantings alongside my front walkway. Several clumps of large, satiny, goblet-shaped blooms in an enticing shade of soft, lavender-pink, magically emerge among the shrubs and fading perennials. Glistening in the early morning sunlight, these elegant blooms of the autumn crocus (Colchicum spp.) announce the official arrival of the fall season.

Green thumbs up

Significantly larger than our early spring-blooming crocuses, with blossoms up to 8 inches in diameter, the autumn crocuses grow from corms which should be planted during late summer or early autumn in full sun or very light shade in a fertile, well-drained soil. The blooms appear a few weeks later without the presence of foliage which will not become visible until early the following spring. At that time, large clusters of bold, strap-like leaves up to 12 inches long, surface and persist until early summer, gradually turning yellow as they mature. As with other bulbs whose foliages may become unsightly as they cure, these corms are often best inter-planted among daylilies, groundcovers or deciduous shrubs to conceal the dying foliage.

There are many species of this intriguing bulb varying in size, color and bloom time, although the majority tend to be pink, lavender or white and flower in early autumn. Known also as meadow saffron, it should be noted that all parts of these plants are extremely toxic. It is a derivative of the autumn crocus which has been used to alter the chromosome number of daylilies from diploid to tetraploid.

The term "bulb" has come to encompass a large group of plants which are able to store energy in fleshy, underground structures. Only some of these are "true bulbs," including tulips, daffodils, hyacinths and lilies. If you were to slice one of these true bulbs vertically at this time of year, you would discover a complete plant inside, with miniature flower buds, leaves and stems. The outer area is actually modified leaves or scales which contain food to sustain the plant during dormancy and early growth. These scales are joined at the bottom with a basal plate from which the roots will emerge.

A planting of true bulbs usually expands each season by producing new bulbs alongside the original parent bulb which also continues to grow and produce flowers. Daffodils are a prime example, their offspring readily seen when one purchases bulbs with multiple "noses," each of which has the capability of producing blossoms the following spring.

Although tulips are also true bulbs, after a few growing seasons, the parent bulb usually dies, leaving only immature bulbs behind which often produce only leaves until these new bulbs grow large enough to produce flowers. To ensure a continuous show of glorious tulips from season to season requires that new bulbs be planted every second or third year.

In addition to true bulbs, many plants which feature enlarged stems or swollen roots tend to be considered bulbs. Crocus and gladiolus are technically corms characterized by multiple growing points or "eyes" on top with a basal plate from which the roots emanate. During growth, the corms shrivel away and new ones form on top or next to the old ones.

Anemones and caladiums, like potatoes, are defined as tubers. The "eyes" of these modified stems are scattered all over the surface of the tuber and roots and leaf shoots sprout from these growth buds.

Success with bulbs begins with the all-important process of selecting healthy, top-quality stock. Purchase top-sized bulbs from reliable catalog sources or local nurseries. When buying locally, choose firm bulbs which are free of soft spots, deep cuts or blemishes. Do not be concerned by small nicks or the loss of the papery brown covering known as a tunic found on tulips, daffodils or crocuses as this will not adversely affect the development of the bulbs. Select the largest specimens of each type of bulb or in the case of daffodils, ones having multiple noses as these will most likely produce larger or more flowers. Store in a cool, dry location if you anticipate a delay in planting.

All bulbs prefer loose, porous soils with excellent drainage to prevent rotting during dormancy. Soils comprised of sandy loam are ideal. The addition of organic material, including peat moss or compost, will improve drainage in heavy soils. Raised beds may be necessary in low, damp locales. Loosen and prepare the soil prior to planting so the roots of the bulbs can develop easily.

While bulbs contain all the nutrients they require to flower the first year, to continue healthy growth and flowering, bulbs need phosphorus, a mineral which moves very slowly through the soil. To ensure its availability in future seasons, mix a teaspoon of superphosphate or bulb booster in the soil at the bottom of the planting hole. Although bone meal serves as an alternative, organic source of this nutrient, you may wish to avoid its use as animals often detect its scent and dig up your newly planted bulbs.

injury, the possession action against her was dismissed because of a technically defective 30-day notice. Now a second 30-day notice must be served on their daughter-in-law, followed with a second action for possession brought in the Housing Court. In the meantime, I wonder when Judith Audette will discover that if she begins an action for divorce, she might possibly end up with the house.

Information is current as of October 06, 2000. For information on specific mortgage programs, call the lender. Rates, points, and programs are subject to change daily and cannot be guaranteed. Points include discount fees and origination fees. Quotes = rate+total points/APR (annual percentage rate); calculated as follows: conventional 20% down and $100,000 mortgage; jumbo 20% down and $252,700 mortgage; FHA 3%–5% down and $100,000 mortgage. Most quotes are for 30-day lock-ins, but can vary. Maximum conventional loan amount is $252,700; jumbo loans are in excess of $252,700. ARM–adjustable rate mortgage. ARM rates are quoted as follows: rate +total points/APR (type of ARM program is listed in parentheses). LTV–loan to value. MI–mortgage insurance. NA–not available. NQ–rates not quoted. Lenders, to be listed in this paid advertised column, call 480-905-8000 or 1-800-CNS-8525. Mortgage rates and programs are updated online daily. Phantom is a big, tall and heavy adult male Doberman. He's strong on a leash, but not jumpy or hyper. He is frisky in the play yard - prances around with a tennis ball. He has a docked tail and cute floppy ears. He is not happy in the kennel - woofs, and whines and paces around - he definitely misses human contact. Please come see him and give this dog a chance! If you would like to find out more about Phantom, or perhaps another of our homeless friends, please call us. Canine Connections is a non profit organization. Funded only by donations from the public, we network with many area shelters to find homes for the animals that do not have a family to care for them. Our hotline is 781-440-0477.

Ce Ce & Friends Humane Society is a non profit all volunteer cat shelter providing a clean and warm environment until loving, permanent homes are found. All cats have been examined by a veterinarian & tested for feline leukemia & feline AIDS, are up to date on all vaccinations and, if old enough, spayed & neutered. New volunteers are welcome. To adopt or for more information, call 617-328-5812

"I had very poor vision - 20/400. My eye doctor labeled me a 'hard core' contact lens wearer. But I wore them all the time, never took them out. I developed eye infections and irritations. So I decided LASIK surgery was my best option."
"At Post & O'Connor Eye Centers, they prepared me very well for the procedure. They told me virtually everything that was going to happen. As a result, I wasn't nervous at all. I had no fear. Everybody from the doctors on down was perfectly kind. It all went very smoothly."
"Now my vision is very good. In fact, my husband no longer fears driving with me at night. Instead of watching the road, he has time to study while I drive."

Brudnoy AT THE MOVIES

David Brudnoy
CNC Film Critic

Barenaked in America (B)

Concert films rarely rise to the level of either "Woodstock," which ably captured the experience of that first great mess of a love-in music fest, or the occasional oddity from the 1970s heyday of rock, often, it is said by those in the know, accompanied best by some chemical substance to enhance the experience. More recently the concert film has been reinvented as a celluloid ego trip, snippets of music accompanied by tiresome and idiotic would-be profundities tossed off by the self-indulgent "artists" who are their stars. "Almost Famous," which is almost not a hit, sad to say, is an at times brilliant and invariably amusing commentary on the concert film cast as a picaresque tale of a young wannabe rock critic enjoying (and enduring) close encounters of the rock kind with a not so hot group of narcissistic musicians.

How to find the middle ground between mindless self-congratulation and out and out spoof? "Barenaked in America" makes a good-faith effort at doing just that and in large part succeeds. This is an unassuming film about a group that has reached a kind of pinnacle — for how long is anybody's guess — after climbing up out of nothing but street performance in its native Toronto. With a name that could mean something specific (unlike, say, Beatles or Rolling Stones, which could mean anything, or Dead Kennedys, which meant too much), Barenaked Ladies starts out with a joke: They're neither ladies nor naked, though no doubt many an anxious parent (like mom in "Almost Famous") might assume the worst and grit teeth and adamantly refuse young Jason and innocent Melissa permission to go watch them. Fret not, these are toothless minstrels, as dangerous as Canadian bacon.

Much ado about coming from Canada: a now nearly requisite ingredient in any film permitting one of our northern neighbors to say things about whence he has come. While "down Mexico way" has a tinge of threatening to it — oh those illegals! — "I'm from Canada" is its own punchline, like "Say 'abooot' and 'eh'; please, please say it!" The ladies make what they can of this and marvel at their acceptance, after a long effort to achieve it, among USAites. They have built a devoted fandom owing to their comic riffs, which are hit or miss but invariably earnest or at least mock-earnest, and their surprising (to my untutored ears) musicality. Their lead singer, an out of shape glasses-wearing chap named Steven Page, has a glorious voice, and when he stops horsing around and hopping up and down on the stage like a rabbit on fire — he is no twinkle-toes and the world would not mourn if he stood still — his pipes are impressive. His buddy, Ed Robertson, who can't decide whether to be platinum blond and wear one of those hideous beard-mustache things that are all the rage, or not, is a skilled instrumentalist and has a worthy voice, too. These guys do most of the talking, their pals speaking now and again, and their audiences are hugely appreciative, and just plain huge, in Boston and elsewhere. Dumb me, I've never heard of them. Lucky me, now I have.

Capsized by a cruise line

George Hobica

By George Hobica
COPLEY NEWS SERVICE

Q. In May, my husband and I booked a cruise on the new Millennium ship with Celebrity Cruise Lines for a cruise to be taken in March 2001. We paid a $500 deposit, but have not paid the full amount yet, although they gave us our cabin number. Our travel agent called us yesterday, and told us that Celebrity has sold out the whole ship for a charter, and that we would have to be bumped from the week that we wanted.

Normally, it wouldn't matter that much, but this cruise was in celebration of a 40th birthday and it just wouldn't be the same if we went on a different date. I know we will get the deposit back, but is there any way to make Celebrity honor our initial booking date?

We have cruised with Celebrity five times, and usually love it, so getting treated like this on a special occasion makes it that much worse.

A. It looks like Celebrity went for the big bucks, rather than honoring the reservations of loyal customers like you. Even if Celebrity found a spare cabin on your original dates, I don't think you'd want to be stuck on a ship with a charter group. Everyone will probably know each other already, and you'd feel left out.

Also, charter groups can sometimes be a bit boisterous. I was stuck on a ship full of partying auto dealers once, and didn't like it. (By the way, if you're sailing on a smaller ship, it's always a good idea to ask if there's a large group booked for that very reason.)

You're better off finding another ship on the dates you wanted.

Q. I'm writing about the readers who missed their flight because they were told it was delayed and they went off to get something to eat only to find when they returned to the gate that the flight had departed. We had something similar happen to us on US Airways.

When we arrived at the gate, the plane was gone, ahead of the rescheduled time. They didn't offer to put us on the next available flight. Instead, we had to buy $900 worth of tickets on Southwest at full fare to get to our destination.

What's US Airways' policy on this type of problem?

A. According to a US Airways spokesperson, passengers who miss a flight should be offered seats on the next available flight on a standby basis at the original fare. I checked into your situation and US Airways is offering $300 in travel vouchers in compensation, although there's no confirmation as to whether or not their gate agent followed procedure (this appears to be their final offer).

If you can prove that you weren't offered standby travel, have documentation for your flights on Southwest, and if you're not satisfied with their offer, then you might try negotiating with them directly or, as a last resort, go to small claims court.

Q. We were scheduled to cruise on Premier Cruise Lines, which went belly up recently. Just as a warning to your readers, since we bought travel cancellation and interruption insurance from the cruise line directly, we weren't covered for bankruptcy.

What are our chances of getting our money back?

A. Judging from past cruise line bankruptcies, not much. You'll probably be far back in the line, behind secured creditors. Never, ever, buy insurance directly from the cruise company, because if they go bankrupt they won't have any money left to pay your claim. Instead, buy it from an independent insurer like Travel Guard, CSA Insurance or Access America.

Q. Everyone who writes you seems to complain about bad airline service, and I can't blame them since it really is so bad, at least here in the United States.

Well, I recently flew to Frankfurt, Germany, on Singapore Airlines (it was my first time on that airline) and I just have to say that it's a whole different experience. The plane was spotless, we left on time, arrived a few minutes early, the food was good (at least for airline food) and, most important, the flight attendants were fantastic - they were actually nice, imagine that.

Why can't U.S. airlines match them? And, if the U.S. airlines can't do a better job, then why don't foreign airlines like Singapore fly between U.S. cities?

A. Singapore, and most Asian airlines for that matter, are indeed a cut above U.S. carriers (that's why they're voted No. 1 time after time by readers of travel magazines like Travel and Leisure).

U.S. law prohibits foreign airlines from carrying passengers between U.S. cities, and I wouldn't expect that to change any time soon. But, it would be a great idea to change the law, especially if the United-US Airways merger goes through and there are fewer airline choices as a result.

Predictions are for swift action at Special Town Meeting

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

A total of 27 articles are up for discussion at Monday's special town meeting, including items involving the rezoning and development of the Hagerty Property, final engineering studies of Woodside Cemetery, and numerous capital expenditures.

"There are some issues that will get people out," said Town Manager Mark Haddad. Along with the Hagerty issue, he also cited the potential renovation of the old Osgood School's 1929 wing into a children's museum, and articles that will authorize the town to purchase a new street sweeper, ambulance and police car as potential draws Monday.

A quorum of 100 people is needed before the meeting can begin at 7 p.m. in the middle/high school auditorium. "We'll wait at least an hour because once the meeting is established by a quorum, it's deemed to exist even if the numbers drop off, until the quorum is challenged," said moderator George Marlette.

Feds want to revisit work on flood plain

Impact on saltmarsh is questioned

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

How fine is the line between protecting the environment and protecting a flood plain and the homes surrounding it?

That's what town, state and federal officials are trying to figure out regarding James Brook and the Jacob's Meadow floodplain area.

After a 1996 nor'easter left part of Cohasset Village under as much as three feet of water, the town received a grant from the Federal Emergency Management Agency, and its state sister agency MEMA, to improve the town's floodplain in 1998. As a result, the town replaced its two tidal gates in Cohasset Harbor, and added a third outfall pipe with hopes of increasing the amount of water that drains out of Jacob's Meadow.

However, according to federal officials, not only were the wrong tidal gates installed on the three outfall pipes —two pipes are 36 inches wide, the third is 48 inches wide — the work was done without the proper federal permits. But the engineer in charge of the project, Domenic Tutela, said he was never told he needed a federal permit, and insists he put on the proper gates.

"They probably thought it was a maintenance activity, which are typically non-reporting activities," explained Greg Penta of the Army Corps of Engineers. "[The 1998 project] involved changing the character and scope of the system. They increased the pipe size, added a third opening, and for that, they have to come to us for a permit."

"We did everything necessary relative to getting a permit," Tutela responded. "We didn't feel a Corps (Army Corps of Engineers) permit was necessary."

Red Lion restrictions eased

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

If Madonna songs played at 95 decibels can't be heard from neighboring areas, selectmen agreed they could ease on the restrictions placed on the Red Lion Inn when it comes to amplified music.

Selectmen, acting as the licensing board, agreed to lift some of its restrictions on the Red Lion Inn's alcohol and entertainment license, including the limitation on amplified music in the Lilac House function room. The board extended the hours of operation in the Red Lion Inn's two function rooms, from 10 p.m. to 11 p.m.

"We got everything we wanted," Red Lion Inn and Lilac House owner Gerd Ordelheide said afterwards. "I'm happy."

Ordelheide complained to selectmen that it was unreasonable to have a 10 p.m. liquor and music shut-off time for weddings and other functions in the Lilac House. He confessed that he had allowed liquor to be served and music played until 11 p.m. on a couple of occasions over the summer because he had already booked the function before the restrictions were set by selectmen in late spring, "and didn't want to get sued."

"We got everything we wanted. I'm happy."
— Red Lion Inn and Lilac House owner Gerd Ordelheide

He originally asked for a midnight curfew to be set, but after a brief powwow during the hearing with this business manager, he agreed to the 11 p.m. time proposed by Selectman Ronnie McMorris.

The amplified music restriction had been attached originally to placate the fears of abutters that music from the Lilac House would reverberate throughout the downtown area and down South Main Street. However, at the hearing Tuesday night, Ordelheide presented a study done by Dr. John Butler of Image Acoustics, and a Cohasset resident, saying with the doors and windows to the Lilac House closed amplified music couldn't be heard at the neighboring property line on South Main Street.

Butler played Madonna on a stereo system as loud as 95 decibels — a "near ear-damaging level" according to Butler's report — inside the Lilac House's function room. Butler then took readings at the various property lines. At the

Living with cancer

Faith, love of family sustains Bergeron after battling disease for five years

Editor's note: This is the third article in a series as part of National Breast Cancer Awareness month.

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSON@CNC.COM

You never expect that it could happen to you. Just ask Cheryl Bergeron.

Shock washed over Bergeron one day in 1995 when doctors at Beth Israel Hospital told her a hip injury was essentially the result of her having breast cancer.

What's more, doctors informed her at the time that the cancer had spread dramatically — it had moved to her bones and throughout much of her body.

"I have numerous tumors from my head to my thighs," she said, ticking off a list of problems that have surfaced in the last five years. "The knees to the feet have escaped."

But that's about it.

"There is a tumor in the center of my skull...my spine has many tumors including the cervical, thoracic, lumbar, and sacrum. There are also tumors on many of my ribs. Besides my left hip shattering from cancer, the pelvic bone in the right hip was totally encased in a tumor, no bone showing. There is a tumor at the top of my right leg. I also have tumors in the bones of my upper arms. During this past year, I was told the cancer spread to my liver."

Despite her condition, Bergeron, now 52, looks at the world with passion and accepts who she is. She hasn't been able to work since 1995, because taking care of herself is a full-time effort.

"This is definitely a full-time job," she said, "Twenty-four hours a day, seven days a week. Even in my sleep, I'm dreaming good thoughts — thoughts of being healthy."

Hedlund, Cantwell square off in debate

By Jeanne M. Rideout
JRIDEOUT@CNC.COM

The Plymouth-Norfolk District Senate seat is the Nov. 7 election prize at stake when republican incumbent Robert Hedlund and democratic challenger James Cantwell take to the podium Wednesday, Oct. 25, during the Community Newspaper Company sponsored debate at 7 p.m. in the Sanborn Auditorium at Hingham Town Hall.

2000

A number of issues and confrontation between the two are expected to surface, if the final weeks of the campaign are any indication. Last week, the kid gloves came off as Hedlund and Cantwell accused each other of negative campaigning.

The "Fist in his face" race continued over recent days, with both men swapping charges and countercharges.

Hedlund dubbed several statements in Cantwell campaign flyers as misleading.

On the issue of school building assistance, Hedlund described his membership on a Blue-Ribbon Commission on Health Care that led to the creation and passage of landmark health care legislation, including the creation of the state's Senior Pharmacy Program.

He charged that Cantwell's campaign flyer claim stating "As an aide to U.S. Congressman Bill Delahunt, Jim fought to expose the high cost of pharmaceutical drugs for senior citizens" was misleading, giving examples of media reports that "Delahunt's office has falsely taken credit for this 'investigation' when in fact it was done by the House Democratic Caucus staff."

Hedlund said he has made the school Building Assistance Program a priority in is tenure in the Senate. Hedlund said that the reforms he supported in the state budget will make it easier for communities to fund projects and he supported the Senate plan, adopted by the Conference Committee this year, that provided an increase in the program. Hedlund also said that Charting a Vision for the Future ...

With an Eye on the Past

This week in COHASSET

Another special Town Meeting

Just three weeks after the Monday's special Town Meeting, selectmen have authorized another Town Meeting be held on Nov. 13 to tackle the sewer cost overrun.

As of press time, the warrant had not been fully set. It is scheduled for 7 p.m. at Cohasset Middle/High School auditorium.

Halloween curfew

On the recommendation of police chief Brian Noonan, selectmen voted to institute a 9:30 p.m. curfew on the town's teenagers Halloween night.

The move comes after a number of complaints were logged by police of disruptive behavior by groups of teenagers last year. Businesses were vandalized, fireworks were set off, windows broken at the high school and candy stolen from trick or treaters.

"I can't see an reason why they should be out past 9:30 on a school night," selectman Michael Sullivan said. "If they are, they're just asking for trouble."

Official trick or treating hours will be from 4 p.m. to 8 p.m.

1929 wing of Osgood

Just one proposal was received by town procurement officer Mark Haddad for renovating the 1929 wing of the old Osgood School. The proposal was for the children's discovery museum being proposed for the site by Leah Roy. The proposal would have the wing undergo a $1 million renovation at the same time the rest of the former school site is renovated to house the new town library.

Boston Gas line

Boston Gas Company will be installing a 2-inch gas pipe from 7 Highland Ave. to 3 Highland Ave, representative Francis O'Leary told selectmen Tuesday night.

O'Leary said the work is scheduled for sometime in the next week and will be done in unison with the water main replacement project currently going on in the area.

Articles removed from warrant

Three articles slated for discussion at Monday's special Town Meeting have been removed at the request of selectmen.

Article 21, which would have transferred property off King Street to the Cohasset Housing Authority was dropped after confusion sprang up over grant guidelines, and whether the land was even buildable.

Article 29 which would have authorized the town to acquire land off Forest Avenue, adjacent to Wheelwright Park was also dropped.

Article 19, which would have transferred the town's right of way into an open space designation was dropped after a lengthy debate by selectmen in executive session, and will instead be debated at the special Town Meeting on Nov. 13. Town Manager Mark Haddad couldn't comment as to why it was moved, saying it had to do with the town's bargaining position with the MBTA.

Sandy Beach parking lot

Responding to a letter from Sandy Beach Association president Robin Lawrence, selectmen hope to meet with the group to discuss the change in the traffic pattern in the beach's parking lot.

In his letter, Lawrence criticized the board for the "abrupt manner" the change was made.

Earlier this summer selectmen voted to add an exit at the far end of the Sandy Beach parking lot, because of traffic concerns. The change would have cars enter from the southeast end of the lot, and exit from the northwest end to increase safety while cars exiting the lot that is surrounded by dunes.

"The apparent unilateral decision by the board...is opposed by the association." Lawrence said in the letter. He also said "it is not unreasonable to expect that all parties of interest, specifically the Sandy Beach Association, would be consulted prior to a decision that may have a major impact upon the operation of Sandy Beach..."

The association suggested that the northwest exit be closed, the combined entrance/exit reconfigured, and the view-obstructing dune grasses trimmed.

Planning Board approvals

The Planning Board was busy tying up loose ends at its recent meeting, giving approvals to Lily Sestito and Dustin Wheelwright.

Sestito came before the board to ask for approval for a plan amendment to change the requested granite curbing to Cape Cod style berms on Carbone Lane. She said because of a shortage of granite, completion of the project would be delayed, unless she either switched to concrete curbing or the berms. Sestito said Department of Public Works Superintendent Harold Litchfield, gave his approval for Cape Cod berms, saying it would be easier on his snowplow blades, and allow for better drainage.

Carbone Lane services a five-lot subdivision on the Beechwood side of town, near the Scituate border, according to building commissioner Bob Egan. The last of the 3,000 square foot houses was finished last month.

The planning board agreed to defer to Litchfield and voted unanimously to approve the change.

The board also gave the green light to Wheelwright to begin construction on a seven-lot subdivision off Beechwood Street.

The 40-acre subdivision will see 19 acres of it remain undeveloped. The houses will be approximately 3,000 square feet a piece. A main street, Ox Pasture Lane, will split into two common driveways, with one driveway servicing four houses, and the other driveway leading up to two. The remaining house will be fronted by Ox Pasture Lane.

Cohasset police officer's brother-in-law on USS Cole

By Paula Woodhull
PWOODHULL@CNC.COM

COURTESY PHOTO

It's been almost a week since the attack on the USS Cole off the coast of Yemen, but Kerrie and Garrett Hunt of Pembroke still feel shocked and shaken to the core.

Kerrie's brother, John Washak, 35, was on board the Navy destroyer when terrorists armed with explosives rammed into the vessel's steel hull last Thursday, setting off an explosion that killed 17 crewmates and injured 33 others. Ten of the 17 crew members are still missing.

"He was in the mess line, and for some reason — God knows why — he got out of line." Washak was within 50 feet of the explosion that tore an enormous hole in the 9,100-ton Cole.

"The person he was standing with was killed," said Kerrie.

Her brother, thrown from the force of the blast, sustained burns and scrapes to his face and arms. He is being treated with antibiotics for injuries to his elbow.

In Pembroke, her thoughts and those of her husband, Garrett, a Cohasset police officer and son of Chief Brian Noonan, have been constantly focused on the situation with the USS Cole. The phone hasn't stopped ringing. The couple has two children, Joseph, 10, and Kaitlyn, 1.

The family has spent most of their time keeping up with the latest news developments and are anxiously awaiting her brother's return.

"Until I actually see him, I won't believe he's okay. It's just such a terrifying thing to have happened."

Earlier this week, Kerrie reported that Washak and others still on board the Cole were distraught over several dead crew members whose bodies remained trapped in flooded compartments of the disabled vessel, equipped with guided missiles.

She spoke with her brother by satellite phone on Monday. "It was great to hear his voice."

"He's doing okay physically but mentally he's not so good." She said her brother, like his crewmates, is having trouble sleeping and can't get the image of the terrible carnage out of his mind.

Even the Navy medics are having a hard time dealing with the loss of life, according to Kerrie.

"It's going to take them all awhile to get over what they saw."

Those on board are getting counseling to help them cope with the terrorist attack which, when it first happened, seemed to threaten to push the Middle East, and the rest of the world, to the brink of war at the same time that it sent shock waves through financial markets.

But it's the personal losses that are affecting those who are closest to the incident. "We're very relieved and so thankful that he's okay. We feel so bad for the other families whose loved ones are not coming home."

Washak, a petty officer first class who specializes in communications, enlisted in the Navy in 1985. A graduate of Stoughton High School, he has a wife, Teresa, and two children, Johnathan, 8, and Joshua, 5.

The couple just bought a house outside Norfolk, Va.

News of events unfolding off the coast of Yemen came slowly after initial word of the terrorist attack was reported on CNN.

"It took a long time to hear whether he was okay or not," said Kerrie. "We were glued to CNN all day long."

The family waited 11 hours for word about fatalities and the names of those who were injured. The Navy eventually posted an 800 number that greatly relieved the concern of many family members.

"We had no idea he was hurt." Locally, Kerrie has been in frequent touch with her father, Richard, and mother, Geraldine. Her parents "are doing okay," she said, and are grateful their son will be home soon.

Kerrie said her family has a proud tradition of ties to the U.S. Navy. "We come from a long line" of military service.

Her father served 20 years with the Navy and her grandfather served in the Navy. Brothers Gregory and Richard also enlisted. Washak's other siblings include Eric, Cori and Michelle.

This is not the first time Kerrie's brother has been in harm's way. Washak served on a Navy destroyer during the Gulf War. "That wasn't as bad as this," she said.

Meanwhile, Kerrie said there's a chance her brother and the rest of the crew may be sent home to the U.S. in two weeks. Washak has another four years to serve.

"I can't wait to see him," she said.

In their most recent phone conversation, Washak told his sister that crew members on the Cole have been tremendously uplifted by all the support back home. Washak has sent e-mail messages home since the bombing attack.

Vandals wreck Halloween display on Norfolk Road

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Robert Healy loves Halloween. He looks forward to the holiday every year and decorates his yard with an elaborate display of "grave keepers" and "grim reapers" complete with black capes, lighted masks and tombstones.

This year was no exception. He and his 13-year-old son, Brian, spent six hours Saturday putting up the cornstalks, ghouls, speakers, strobe lights and a timing system, crosses and tombstones at their Norfolk Road home. Then they turned on the lights.

Right away cars slowed down and neighborhood children came by to have a look, Healy recalled.

But the next morning, the Healys discovered vandals had trashed their display. They broke light fixtures and stole the masks and speakers. The losses amount to about $600.

"It's just like someone came into your house and stole your Christmas tree and all your presents," said Healy, who has put up a Halloween display in his yard for 12 years without a problem.

"The kids are disappointed, it knocks the spirit right out of you," he said.

Healy said police Det. Rick Grassie is investigating the incident.

Neighbors and friends are encouraging Healy to rebuild the display but the local lobsterman — who used round buoys to fill out the masks — isn't sure he will.

He's worried the vandals will return and says the money that he spent over the years on masks, speakers and lights is hard to come by.

"I've never even had a pumpkin smashed before," Healy said.

SENATOR McCAIN ENDORSES McKENNA

STRAIGHT TALK AMERICA

September 8, 2000

Mary Anne McKenna
670 Main St.
Hingham, MA 02043

Dear Mary Anne,

I applaud you for your service and dedication to the country. You have laid out a bold and promising agenda to make government accountable to the people, reform taxes, improve education and provide common sense, conservative leadership. I encourage all voters in the 3rd Plymouth District of Massachusetts to embrace your ideas and vote for you in November.

Because of the courage and leadership you have shown, I know the people of Massachusetts can count on you to reform government and give control back to them.

Mary Anne, with the help of responsible leaders like you, we are closer every day to bringing about necessary changes to the practices and institutions of our great democracy. I believe these changes are essential to ensuring the continued success of the American experiment, and keeping America in this new century as bright a beacon of hope for mankind as it was in the last.

Good luck with your campaign and thank you again for your service to this great nation.

Respectfully,

John McCain

AROUND TOWN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

FARMER'S MARKET

Hello Everyone! I hope that you are all enjoying the crisp, fall weather and are able to take in some of the great festivals and fairs that are around. The Farmers Market Festival held last week was wonderful and a great time was had by all in attendance.

OFF TO SPAIN

We have some great news from Colby College in Waterville, Maine. Caitlin E. Slodden, a first-year student at the school, is spending the fall semester of the 2000-01 academic year enrolled in the Colby in Salamanca program. Caitlin, a graduate of Thayer Academy, is the daughter of Henry and Karen Slodden of Cohasset. Colby in Salamanca is an intensive Spanish language program in Salamanca, Spain, for first-year Colby students. The program is supervised by a Colby faculty member in residence. In January, Caitlin will continue her studies as a member of the Class of 2004 on Colby's campus in Maine.

VASSAR FIELD HOCKEY

We also received some news from Vassar College in Poughkeepsie, N.Y. Elizabeth Pierson, daughter of Wigmore Pierson of Atlantic Avenue and Janet Pierson of S. Main Street is a varsity athlete on the Vassar College Women's Field Hockey team. She has gotten off to a wonderful start and the team is currently 8-3 overall,(2-1 in conference play). The field hockey team had an exciting win last week against Rensselaer in the Upstate Collegiate Athletic Association, earning its second conference win 2-1 in overtime. However, the tougher part of the schedule is fast approaching as the team takes on UCAA teams Hamilton and St. Lawrence Oct 6 and 7 and then has another three regular season games. The team placed second at the Betty Richey Tournament and took third at the Seven Sisters Tournament at the start of the season. The team has seven seniors, six of them starters who are doing a good job of leading the squad.

Great job, Elizabeth!

NEWS FOR SENIORS

I have a great piece of information to share with all senior citizens here in town and their families. The Medical Transportation to Boston program is still in effect here in town. Sponsored by a grant from the Executive Office of Elder Affairs, this service takesCohasset elders into Boston for doctor, hospital or clinic appointments. This is a wonderful program and qualified people should definitely take advantage of it. The program is also available to seniors in Hingham, Hull, Norwell and Scituate and is run by professional, experienced drivers and escorts. Reservations are a must and can be made by calling Dolores D. Jakaus at (781)383-0220.

HAPPY 40TH

Happy 40th Birthday to you, Robert Dickson! Devon and Mackenzie love you, you are the best Dad around, and Kelly loves you too! Happy Birthday to a very special Dad and husband from Mackenzie, Devon and Kelly. Hope your day is fun, special and enjoyed.

MAKING A DIFFERENCE

I just want to let everyone know that "Make a Difference" Day is coming up on Saturday, Oct. 28. On this day, people all over the country will be going that extra mile to make a difference in so many ways. Whether you want to spruce up a neglected area in town, gather items for a food pantry, send some clothing, toys or other items to people in need or help spruce up our schools, here is the day to get it started! Please mark your calendars and then let me know some of the ways that you and your family pitched in and helped. This is a way for young children all the way up to our seniors to really pitch in and make the difference! Go Cohasset!

PLAY-A-THON BENEFIT

Sarah Lambert of Cohasset, along with Dana Cullen and Brooke Kingsland of Scituate and Jason Raynor of Norwell, will play at the first South Shore Music Teachers Association play-a-thon, in the Sanctuary at the First Parish Unitarian Church in Norwell. The address is 24 River St. and the event will take place from 9:30 am- 3 p.m. These young adults and children are volunteering their time and seeking donations for Rosie's Place and the Pine Street Inn. Anyone interested in sponsoring these talented young people can email their pledge to dtrach3689@aol.com All checks should be made out to Rosie's Place or the Pine Street Inn, as all monies will go directly to those organizations. Just e-mail your pledge and arrangements will be made to pick up your check. What a great group of people!

WREATH MAKING

The Community Garden Club of Cohasset will hold its monthly meeting at 9 am on Tuesday, Oct. 24 at the Second Congregational Church in Bates Hall. The topic will be "Creating Custom Wreaths." In this demonstration, C.L. Fornari will explain the design principles and construction of basic wreath forms, artificial, living evergreen, twig or wire. By changing the materials used, this information can be used for creating opulent harvest, holiday or spring wreaths for your door or home.

WELCOME HOME

Many people may remember the Knox family of Jerusalem Road here in town. They had four wonderful children, Campbell, Ian, Colin and Alexandra. Margie Knox, who passed away 20 years ago, was very instrumental in starting the Cohasset Swim Center. Well, they were back in town over Columbus Day weekend, to celebrate Alex's wedding at the First Parish Church on the Common. A wonderful reception was held at the Atlantica were a great time was had by all. Alex married Jason Kowalczyk of Syracuse, N.Y. Also in the bridal party, was Alex's step-sister Erin Powell, formerly of Cohasset. The happy couple will be living in Syracuse but, with all the ties here in Cohasset, I am sure we will be seeing them around town often.

That is the news for this week! Please send in all your October and November birthdays, anniversaries and any other special dates that you would like recognized. All news can be sent to 622 CJC Highway, jenpiep@yahoo.com or (781)923-1057. Have a great week! Jennifer Brink

IT'S HAPPENING

Halloween fair

Pumpkins and cornstalks are appearing at local farm stands. Orange and black decorations are showing up in stores and plans are being conjured up for the South Shore Community Center Nursery School's annual Halloween Fair. This year's fair will take place on Cohasset Common on Oct. 29 from 1:30 to 3:30 p.m. A South Shore tradition for more than 20 years, the fair offers Halloween fun for the entire family. Spooks and cartoon characters of all shapes, sizes and ages are encouraged to begin preparing to join in the howlish fun.

For more information about the fair or the programs of the South Shore Nursery School, call Lynne Sheridan at 383-0036.

Harvest supper

A Harvest Supper will be held at Cohasset's Beechwood Congregational Church on Saturday, Oct. 21, at 6:30 p.m. Ham, green beans, harvard beets, coleslaw and potatoes will be served. Following dessert, an auction will be held to benefit the church.

Dinner is $7.99 for adults and $3.50 for children. Seats must be reserved by calling 383-9131.

HSO opens season

On Saturday, Oct. 21, at 8 p.m., the Hingham Symphony Orchestra will open its fourth season under the music direction of Jin Kim, with an exciting concert featuring three monumental works by masters of the symphonic repertoire.

The orchestra will perform Brahms' first symphony and Mozart's final symphony (No. 41, the "Jupiter"), and Copland's playful "Three Latin American Sketches, in Sanborn Auditorium at the Hingham Town Hall. Kim will host a pre-concert exploration at 7 p.m. for anyone interested in learning more about these composers and their works.

Following the concert, the audience is invited to gather at a reception, to meet the musicians and celebrate what promises to be an exceptional season of music on the South Shore.

Tickets are available at the Hingham Public Library, at Card & Shards in Cohasset, or by phone at 740-5694; $20 adults, $18 seniors, $10 under age 18. For more information about the season, including a variety of subscription packages, call managing director Nina Wellford at the above number.

Dance classes

Creative dance classes will be held Tuesdays from 10 to 11 a.m. for children 3 to 5 years old.

Movement classes are held Fridays from 9:30 to 10:30 a.m. for moms with children 1 to 2 years old.

Classes will be held at 55 Rear South Main St. (behind the Red Lion Inn).

For more information call Becky Ford at (781) 545-0917.

Halloween dance

The Cohasset Youth Resources Committee will conduct a Halloween, costumes optional, dance for grades 6 to 8 on Tuesday, Oct. 31, at the Garage from 7 to 10 p.m. Admission is $5 per person and prizes will be awarded for various costume categories.

Youngsters must be picked up by 10 p.m. by an adult or parent. No child will be released from the dance without an adult present and accountable for each of the youngsters.

Any parent or adult who wishes to help chaperone, may call Jack Worley at the recreation office at 383-4109.

Harbor Walk

The Cohasset Revitalization Corporation is sponsoring a community workshop to gather input on the creation of an enhanced Captains' Walk along Cohasset Harbor. The workshop will be held on Wednesday, Nov. 1 at 7:30 p.m. at the Lightkeepers' Residence on Government Island. The goal of the harbor walk proposal is to effectively link the various public and private properties along the harbors edge through the establishment of improved sidewalks and walkways. The enhancement of the existing area can help provide a safer environment for pedestrians and bicyclists; improve harbor viewing areas; enliven the rich maritime history of the waterfront through interactive markings as depicted by the existing Captains' Walk; and provide a clear delineation between pedestrian, bicycle, parking, and vehicle travel along Border Street. The purpose of this workshop is to gather input and ideas on the extent of improvements the community would like to see in the Harbor area. Representatives from the Cecil Group, an urban landscape design firm, will help facilitate this workshop.

Village workshop

The Cohasset Revitalization Corporation, in partnership with the Cohasset Village Revitalization Task Force, is sponsoring the second in a series of community workshops to develop designs for infrastructure, circulation, and streetscape improvements in Cohasset Village. The workshop will be held on Thursday, Nov. 9 at 7:30 p.m. in the Town Hall Auditorium. The Cecil Group, urban landscape design consultants, will give a presentation on various design alternatives for such things as new sidewalks, better parking, improved vehicle and pedestrian access, and associated streetscape design alternatives. Many of the ideas to be presented are derived from the public input received to date on the project.

The CRC and the Town of Cohasset encourage community participation throughout the revitalization program to bring needed improvements to the Village and Harbor areas of the community. Your questions, ideas, or comments are encouraged and may be sent to the CRC and/or the Village Revitalization Task Force of the Town of Cohasset. Preliminary designs and ideas are on display at the CRC office located at 87 Elm St. (across from Kimball's). Office hours are Monday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday from 10 a.m.–4 p.m.; Tuesday 12– 8 p.m.; and Saturday 9 a.m. – 1 p.m. The CRC can also be reached via phone @ 383-2449; fax @ 383-3334, or email at cohrevitalize@aol.com.

Cell phones and safe driving

With top priorities such as education accountability and health care reform caught in a seemingly inescapable political quagmire, Bay State lawmakers are rattling their legislative sabers over an easy target: cellular phone use.

The proliferation of cell phones — more than 100 million people in the U.S. have them — coupled with recent fatal accidents that allegedly involved the use of hand-held phones, has some legislators ready to lower the boom against the trend of talking while driving. The Public Safety Committee held an informal hearing last week on the dangers of using a cell phone while driving, a precursor to a "comprehensive, responsible" bill Senate Chairman James Jajuga promises to file in December that seeks to restrict — and possibly eliminate — the use of cell phones by drivers.

The problem here is, there's no conclusive proof that cellular phones are to blame for a statistically significant number of accidents. Armed with mostly anecdotal evidence and "fuzzy math" statistics, Jajuga suggested the dangers of cell phones might best be mitigated by following the lead of a New York county, which completely banned the use of hand-held cell phones in cars. But Jajuga and other supporters of the measure were met by a steady stream of testifiers who urged lawmakers to back down from the tough stance. David Ropeik, director of risk communication for the Harvard Center of Risk Analysis, told the committee that while cell phones "definitely" pose a risk, the danger is much smaller than many commonplace encounters.

Indeed, Ropeik pointed out the risk of being killed while using a cell phone in a car is about 6.4 in 1 million — eight times less risky than driving without a seatbelt and five times less risky than driving drunk once per month. Law enforcement officials echo Harvard's findings. Public Safety Secretary Jane Perlov testified that in all the time she was responding to accidents as a New York City police officer, she never concluded that cell phones were a primary factor.

So what's the rush for legislation? It's even more curious considering the rapidly advancing hands-free technology, which would allow cell phone users to talk without holding a hand-held unit to their ear. Voice recognition technology will soon allow drivers to tell the cell phone to dial the number itself. If lawmakers keep their noses out, much of the distraction problems would resolve themselves.

Perhaps there is middle ground between a total ban and carte blanche usage. Legislators might consider, for example, a law that carries additional penalties against a driver involved in an accident if it's determined a cell phone played a role. That accident might go from a "no fault" to a "fault" infraction, carrying with it fines or criminal action — depending on the severity of the accident — and the likelihood of increased insurance premiums.

Cell phones can be distracting, but so can many activities undertaken in automobiles — changing a CD or cassette, drinking coffee, putting on makeup, and reading the newspaper among them. If a driver causes an accident because they're focused on something other than driving, they should pay a penalty.

But yanking cell phones out of automobiles at this point would be a draconian step based on flimsy evidence. If the Public Safety Committee can prove more conclusively that cell phones have a direct correlation to accidents, the Legislature should pursue this matter further. Short of that, it seems there are bigger priorities on which to focus.

Statistics might not conclusively show cell phone use to be a hazard, but anyone who has watched a driver, cell phone to his ear, drifting from lane to lane at high rates of speed knows that a bad driver becomes more dangerous when his mind is on a phone call, not the road. We may not need a new law, but we can certainly use more common sense on the highways. If you can't do it safely, pull over before you pick up the phone.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

King Street traffic

TO THE EDITOR:

(This is in response to Mr. and Mrs. Fahey's letter, Cohasset Mariner Oct. 12)

I've lived on King St. for 15 years, and have observed countless cars traveling well over the speed limit. Anyone who watches from Schofield Road, where police radar cars make their observations, can see speeding cars go by day after day. Or simply ask the police about it.

The suggestions were not simply of our own origin, but those experienced with towns where roads have been left in a state of less-than-perfect repair, seemingly for speed regulation. Unfortunately, despite signs, children actively playing on roadsides, horses, active construction or its residue, people do not slow down. What does seem to slow them down is the prospect of repair bills. It was amazing this summer to experience the contrast between those who knew and didn't. One could hear cars and trucks flying down the street, either not caring about damage, or simply not knowing about it. (Pickup trucks full of tools making explosive sounds as their truck beds bottomed out on road seams was my favorite.) And then there were those who definitely knew, perhaps you being among them, who navigated the road slowly, respectful of the circumstances. Known as 3A bypass, especially to those on Beechwood Street, King Street, was never as quiet as during the bumpy days. Scenic? You're right. Everyone should slow down and enjoy it, but they don't. Again, ask the cops. They'll tell you the speed difference on newly paved roads.

Last of all, regretfully, I'm insulted by your accusation of how my and Mr. Sullivan's "attitudes suggest the genesis of the "me" generation." Obviously you know little of my work, and are simply ignoring Mr. Sullivan's 15 plus years of service in one capacity or another in Cohasset. The cause attributed to us was more in remembrance of accidents on King Street, while your letter was seemingly about your car undercarriage, your tires, your taxes, and your entitlement to smooth roads.

Something different was placed right in our laps with the construction. I think Mr. Sullivan, myself, and others, see it.

Village plans

TO THE EDITOR:

Based on the coverage of a letter to the selectman regarding the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation (Oct. 12 Mariner), it seems that some have perceived the letter negatively. As signatories to the letter, we view it as a positive statement of a desire to have town planning led by our elected officials, who have the interests of the entire community in mind. Our local democratic institutions are not merely obstacles to overcome as the final step in implementing a town plan developed by very particular business interests.

Given the different interpretations of the letter to the selectmen, we think that the best way to clarify matters is to allow the letter to speak for itself. In fact, we had hoped that the letter would be published together with the report of its presentation to the selectmen. As an open communication to a public board, the letter is a matter of public record.

We enclose a copy of the letter to the selectmen, copies of the original signatures, and a transcript of the signatures.

RE: The Cohasset Revitalization Corporation
Dear Selectmen:

The creation of the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation (CRC) by a group of individuals with so many issues pending before various town entities requires a watchful eye. It appears that the normal decision making processes are being circumvented and the autonomy of town officials is eroding.

We seem to be traveling into dangerous waters when the agenda and vision for Cohasset is set by CRC and not by our elected/appointed officials. CRC's agenda focuses on enhancing the economic interests of a very few businessmen. Reference a letter written by CRC, in it they state, "The goal of this nonprofit organization is to bring much-needed infrastructure improvements such as new sidewalks, parking, lighting and other streetscape amenities to the village and harbor."

Who is setting the agenda? We welcome the assistance in revitalizing the town. Perhaps CRC, in the pure spirit of a nonprofit, should be encouraged to contribute directly to the town. This eliminates the concern and liability of having private citizens care for and control the maintenance of town property. More importantly, it removes the appearance of undue influence and allows the town to decide what the most pressing needs are.

We encourage and support citizens who want to contribute and lend a helping hand to the town. This assistance must be on the town's terms in accordance with a plan and a vote. Any initiative will consider the needs of the community as a whole and not focused on enhancing narrow commercial interests.

Ultimately this is a question of leadership. We ask the town boards to follow and enforce existing regulations and bylaws. We ask our selectmen to govern.

Support for budget article 3 urged

At Town Meeting Monday, Oct. 23, Cohasset residents will be asked to approve warrant article 3. This article allows for the transfer of funds already received by the town of Cohasset into the budget of the Cohasset schools.

EDUCATION MATTERS

PAT MARTIN

As many recall, during last winter's 2000-'01 school budgeting process, the school committee decided to set aside a $300,000 cost figure needed to cover a deficit created from special education services rather than try to cover it in the new budget. It was the thinking of both the school committee and the town manager at the time that this figure could be paid later in the year by funds released to communities by the state in July as well as unanticipated revenues generated by the town. If the school committee tried to cover the $300,000 in the 2000-'01 budget, the result would mean an override vote last April or substantial cuts in school programs for this year.

As expected, Chapter 70 funds (state aid) were allocated in July and new unanticipated funds came into the town to cover the amount of $300,000.

Now, in order to fulfill the school committee and town manager's funding plan, town residents need to approve the transfer of these funds from the town budget to the schools.

This act will have no impact on taxes as it simply transfers funds already received from the state. It also has no impact on other town departments or services as this money has always been intended for school use.

Should this article not be approved and this money not transferred, it would mean $300,000 in cuts would have to be made in this year's school budget to cover the state-mandated costs of last year's special education services. With the school budget as tight as it already is, a $300,000 cut would mean a substantial loss of teachers and staff. A loss the town of Cohasset cannot afford to make.

Please come out for Town Meeting Monday night and support warrant article 3. Not only will you be investing in our children's future but you will also be sending the message to the Statehouse that it is time that they release the stress on communities to cover 82 percent of the state-mandated costs of special education.

As always, if you have questions regarding this article or anything else regarding school funding, please feel free to call me or any other of the members of the Cohasset School Committee. We appreciate hearing from you.

Pat Martin is chairman of the Cohasset School Committee.

T-Day myths

The folks that run Plimoth Plantation are fixing to trade one Thanksgiving myth for another one.

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

All these years we've thought of the Pilgrim fathers — the mothers were probably still in the kitchen — as sitting down with their Indian friends on the last Thursday in November and gorging on turkey, cranberry sauce and pumpkin pie just before the big football game between Wampanoag High and Pequot Prep.

Apparently this is not so.

According to the latest scuttlebutt, it was a state dinner in honor of the great Indian chief Massasoit and the Indians . . . er, the Native Americans . . . brought their own venison since they hated the Pilgrims because of what Columbus did to their cousins in the Caribbean 129 years before and 2,000 miles away.

Furthermore, the latest research on the subject has discovered that the 90 Native Americans who showed up for the nosh outnumbered the Pilgrims, a discovery that I'm inclined to question because the last time Indians outnumbered Roundeyes was at the Little Big Horn and look what they did to poor George.

Actually, no one really knows for sure what happened that day in the fall of 1621 except that John, Priscilla, Captain Miles and all the gang ate dinner and were joined by Massasoit and his men, probably attracted by the aroma of Priscilla's cooking.

The only eye witness report we have of the Big Feed is in a letter that one of the Pilgrim Fathers named Edward Winslow sent to a friend in England on Dec. 11, 1621. He said:

"Our harvest being gotten in, our governor sent four men on fowling; so that we might, after a more special manner, rejoice together, after we had gathered the fruit of our labours.

The only eye witness report we have of the Big Feed is in a letter that one of the Pilgrim Fathers named Edward Winslow sent to a friend in England on Dec. 11, 1621.

"They four, in one day, killed as much fowl as, with a little help besides, served the Company almost a week. At which time, amongst other recreations, we exercised our Arms; many of the Indians coming amongst us.

"And, amongst the rest, their greatest King, Massasoyt, with some 90 men; whom for three days we entertained and feasted. And they went out and killed five deer; which they brought to the Plantation; and bestowed on our governor, and upon the Captain, and others."

Governor William Bradford, the official chronicler of the Plimoth Colony, didn't think the so-called first Thanksgiving was important enough to chronicle in his book, "Of Plymouth Plantation." But a passage in Bradford that has been interpreted as an oblique reference to the great day goes like this:

"All the summer there was no want; and now began to come in store of fowl, as winter approached, of which this place did abound when they came first (but afterward decreased by degrees). And besides water fowl there was great store of wild turkeys, of which they took many, besides venison, etc.

"Besides they (Bradford always used the third person) had about a peck of meal a week to a person, or now since harvest, Indian corn to that proportion. Which made many afterwards write so largely of their plenty here to their friends in England, which were not feigned but true reports."

Trying to determine at this late date exactly what happened on the first Thanksgiving is a little like the archeologist of the 25th century who dug up the remains of Eddie Gaedel — and concluded that all baseball players were midgets.

COHASSET CARES

New boutique emerging at RTF

By Allan MacDonald

An example of volunteerism at its best is currently underway at our Recycling Transfer Facility, and I'm sure you've noticed it—Scout Andy Dennis' fine-looking new structure, first building on your right as you enter the establishment. This is the new boutique/take it or leave it/second-hand/swap or exchange shop for items no longer wanted by someone and perfectly usable by someone else, a place for things too good to throw away. Cohasset has an excellent history of treasures contributed and retrieved in this "fashion."

Andy's Eagle Scout project is the highest achievement in Scouting, and requirements are that it be public service, for non-Scouting use. Eagle Scout projects are demanding, and this new boutique will probably see use by just about everyone in town. So it's an excellent idea. It will cut down on trash that we have to pay to have hauled away, and it is an utterly practical example of re-use, a concept so important in our glutted materialistic world.

So, please look for Andy's new boutique in its new location. We have very limited space at the RTF. We keep trying different locations for our components to maximize efficiency. Wouldn't it be great to have the space for a transfer facility that some of our neighboring towns have?

Andy's project has consumed $2,300 in materials so far, and further financial contributions toward this building would be very much appreciated. Call Andy or Arthur Lehr or Merle Brown.

Thanks so much for your thoughtfulness and hard work, and more power to you and to other Eagle Scout aspirants, Andy!

See you next time.

Allan MacDonald is publicity chairman of the Cohasset Recycling Committee.

LIBRARY CORNER

The Children's Room

Suzanne Terry, children's librarian, at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library still has openings for the winter Children's Story Hour on Thursday afternoons at 1 p.m. The program begins Oct. 5 and continues Oct. 12, 19, 26 and Nov. 2 and 9.

Each 45-minute program consists of several picture book stories and a simple craft project. Children must be at least 3-1/2 years old to register.

For more information, call Mrs. Terry at 383-1348.

Video Available

A composite of several award-winning videos, which several Cohasset youngsters produced this summer, is available for viewing at the library. Clips of Alex Schwanter's "Mr. Jynx," Best Claymation, and Mike Devlin's Best Editing entry, "Stranded," can be seen along with other entries from the South Shore Libraries.

"David's Road," Best Picture, was produced and directed by Erik Belz and can be seen in its entirety at the end of the awards ceremony video. All the clips are great and "David's Road" is well-worth watching. Belz, along with Greg Smith and a lot of help from the entire Belz family, truly has a creative knack with the camera. It is thrilling from beginning to end.

The videos were part of the first South Shore Libraries Young Adult Video Contest 2000 which will be offered again next summer. Take the time to check this video out and see local celebrities at their best. The video will be available in the Children's Room or ask at the front desk for more information.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Silent majority

TO THE EDITOR:

I read with great interest the "Harbor Walk" article in the Sept. 28 issue of the Mariner and also a related letter to the editor from a resident questioning the need for "revitalizing" the village. I too am concerned with the origin of the Cohasset Revitalizing Corporation. Mr. Dean Rizzo is mentioned as the executive director of this entity. I would like a little more information about this corporation that seems to want to do so much for our town. For instance, who are the other officers of this benevolent "nonprofit" corporation that want to create a "promenade" to the harbor? A more apt name might be the "promenade to Kimballs and or Atlantica."

Several years ago I read in the Patriot Ledger or the Mariner (I forget which) a remark that was attributed to the owner of the Red Lion Inn, and I must paraphrase here: "I want to put some life into this town." Well we're going to have a "jazz" club, a barn, and we have already a larger-than-life new Red Lion Inn. I personally didn't think we needed "more life" in our town; I liked it just the way it was.

All we can do now is to try to stop the "CRC" from steamrollering their personal agenda over the interests of the majority of our citizens..

It's time for the silent majority to speak out, before it's too late.

Steeple support

TO THE EDITOR:

Cohasset is fortunate indeed to have so many generous friends who are proud of our beautiful common and cared enough to help support the steeple reconstruction of the historic Meetinghouse. Contributions have come from all corners of our town and from far away, many of them with heart-warming notes explaining some background behind the gift.

First Parish is deeply appreciative and very grateful to all these citizens, past and present, who wanted to share in the re-building of this lovely spire which is now ready to stand watch over our town for another 200 years.

Red Lion conditions

Dear Selectmen:

As a neighbor of the Red Lion Inn, I am strongly opposed to relaxing the conditions imposed on the inn at this time. Careful consideration was given to the concerns of neighbors at the public hearings leading up to your grants of the All Alcohol Common Victualer, and Entertainment, licenses on May 23 of this year. I believe that proper consideration also was given to the needs of the inn to become a vital part of Cohasset's downtown revitalization, as expressed by its owner, Gerd Ordelheide.

The inn's function facilities are not yet fully operational, and many of the neighbors' concerns regarding noise and safety have yet to be tested. In recent weeks there has been an occasion when band music, emanating from the Lilac House, was heard not only at our house, but also by others two or three blocks away. Whether this was because doors and windows were open or because soundproofing is inadequate, I cannot say. I can only report the effects. I am in no way opposed to the Red Lion Inn's present operations, only the increase in hours proposed and the use of "amplified" music.

It is interesting to note that capacities originally proposed at your hearings and at the zoning board's hearing of Dec. 6, 1999, seem to have dramatically increased per recent advertisements place by the inn. The Lilac House was to have had capacities of 80 (function room) and 30 (first floor bistro); the larger function barn was to hold about 150 people. The inn is now advertising (Patriot Ledger) 150 and 400 for the two function halls alone. These revised capacities would undoubtedly increase both noise and parking problems, which extended operating hours can only exacerbate.

I am sure The Red Lion Inn will flourish under the conditions imposed by your board. Would it flourish more with extended hours and less stringent noise restrictions? I believe so, but the abutting residential neighborhood would be adversely affected in so doing. I think that we all should give the present set of conditions a thorough opportunity to be tested. If change is warranted, you can judge more wisely in a year, based on actual experiences.

CANDIDATES CORNER

Bradley backers, rally scheduled

Local Republicans have lent their support to Former Plymouth County Prosecutor and current Democratic Candidate for State Representative Garrett Bradley.

Hingham Republican John Clifton, Hull Republican Bill McLearn and Cohasset Republican Janyce Brown have all endorsed Bradley's campaign for State Representative over his Republican and unenrolled challengers. They have also agreed to lead the "Republicans for Garrett Bradley" committees in their respective towns.

"I am committed to working with all members of our community and all members of the Legislature to ensure the best results for Hingham, Hull and Cohasset," stated Bradley. "My campaign consists of a dedicated mix of community leaders, neighbors, friends and family. I am excited about the tremendous support I have received from across the political spectrum."

Bradley announced his campaign rally hosted by Congressman William Delahunt and Former State Senator Warren Tolman. The rally will be held on Saturday, Oct. 21 from 7-10pm at the Red Parrot on Nantasket Avenue in Hull.

The public is invited and encouraged to attend the event to spark the final weeks of the campaign and prepare for Election Day activities. For further information about the rally or the campaign, residents can contact the Bradley headquarters at (781) 740-7272.

Sen. John McCain backs McKenna

State Representative candidate Mary Anne McKenna has received a strong endorsement from US Senator John McCain. In his support for McKenna, Senator McCain said, "You have laid out a bold and promising agenda to make government accountable to the people, reform taxes, improve education and provide common sense, conservative leadership." McCain went on to say, "I encourage all voters in the 3rd Plymouth District of Massachusetts to embrace your ideas and vote for you in November."

Mary Anne has just returned from a medical research symposium in Nevada. McKenna said, "Many of these newer drugs are designed to aid in Attention Deficit Disorder which affects many school age children. Drugs dealing with Alzheimer's, osteoporosis, cataract reduction research, and advanced heart related and cholesterol reduction pharmacology were reviewed. As your State Representative I will advance legislation to allow easy and affordable access for parents of children with ADD as well for retirees and senior citizens."

On another front, McKenna said, "The Mills Corporation is far from giving up on their proposal to construct one of the largest malls on the East Coast. It appears they may be waiting for the Nov. 7 elections before they plot their next step. As you know I do not support the Mills Mall project with its access road through Hingham. The construction of this Mall in Weymouth will have an overwhelmingly adverse effect on our quality of life. I strongly support encouraging high-tech companies to locate in Weymouth, where we have a rich resource of local talent right here on the South Shore to meet their employment needs."

Murray defines leadership

I'm running as an independent who has worked for both Democrats and Republicans in the past. I worked in Washington, D.C., as a legislative aide to Democratic Sen. Ted Kennedy and in the House of Delegates in Richmond, Va., as a legislative aide to Republican Delegate Robert McDonnell. As for special interest groups, I chose not to accept money and support from such groups because of the proven corrupting influence that they have on the political process.

Concerning the issue of genuine leadership, if my 12 years of military service in the Reserve Special Forces and National Guard has taught me anything, it has taught me that, regardless of the context, a leader must lead by example. It takes courage to voice your convictions even when they are not always politically expedient. That is why I am unashamed to say that I ran as a Pro-life Democrat in 1998 and am running as a Pro-life independent candidate today.

Ultimately, on Nov. 7, it will come down to deciding how you, the voter, will define leadership. What kind of leadership qualities are you looking for in a State Representative?

Predictions are for swift action at Monday's Special Town Meeting

But he added that he doesn't expect establishing a quorum to be a problem. "When you add up the number of town officials, it's near 50," he said, adding if there is a shortage of people he'd request some of the people watching the meeting on TV to come down. "You'd be surprised how many people watch it," he said.

Marlette said his predecessor, Bill Weeks, didn't like showing the meeting live, as he thought it would urge people to just stay at home and watch it. But Marlette disagreed with that, citing his concern for shut-ins, who physically can't come down to the meeting. "I did not want them to get [the results] second hand," he said.

According to Marlette's rules, no one may speak on any particular issue for more than 10 minutes, nor more than twice on the same subject. "That's very generous," he said of the 10-minute allotment. "Very rarely do citizens exceed that."

He also has the authorization to put time limits on how long a particular issue is discussed.

Though the amount of items to discuss may appear to be daunting, Marlette believes the special town meeting will be a one-night affair. "I am very optimistic everything can be concluded in one session," he said. "The meeting appears to be fairly non-controversial. The Hagerty property may stimulate some debate, but we will have four hours. There's a viable shot at getting through in one session."

There are two items on the warrant involving the Hagerty property, located at the end of Parker Avenue. One would rezone the land as open space, and the other would fund the building of a 28-space parking lot, public dock, and walkway over to Government Island, on the former Cohasset Colonial Furniture Company site.

Haddad also thinks the meeting should be done in one night, but added that his handicapping skills aren't very good. "Every time I make a prediction, I'm wrong," he said, "but I'm going to guess one night."

As of press time, Marlette had not yet broken down the warrant articles to determine which ones would need simple majority votes to pass, and which ones would require a two-thirds vote. He said articles that involve zoning issues, or borrowing money, require a two-thirds majority vote. Transferring money from free cash to another account needs a simple majority vote, and authorization to pay old bills calls for a nine-tenths vote.

The last article will come to the floor at 10:45 p.m., unless unanimous approval is given from the floor, Marlette said. "I've only asked [for it] one time, and a sigh from the audience indicated to me that we'd been there long enough," he said. "This isn't an endurance contest."

Feds want to revisit work on flood plain

sary."

But whether a permit was needed or not, the Army Corps of Engineers and federal Environmental Protection Agency want changes made to the flood plain drainage system, changes that could cost the town tens of thousands of dollars.

The issue at hand are the 10-foot-high reeds that can be seen growing on the edge of Jacob's Meadow across from Kimball's Hotel on Elm Street known as phragmites.

According to Ed Reiner, a saltmarsh restoration expert with the EPA, Jacob's Meadow is a saltmarsh that is, in his opinion, dying. "A salt marsh needs salt water," he explained. "What happens when you cut off the flow of salt water, phragmites takes over."

Though phragmites might look harmless, Reiner said it can have a multi-fold negative impact on the environment and could create an even bigger flooding problem.

"This plant basically takes over the normal short grasses. It grows so thick and spreads, it might be the only thing in the marsh," he explained.

Reiner said the long dry stems can also pose a serious fire hazard in the summer, could cut off access of fish into James Brook that normally eat mosquito larvae resulting in a higher than normal level of mosquitoes, and broken stems could block the brook's flow pattern and retain sediment impeding the draining process altogether. Reiner said the EPA has plenty of experience with these types of situations happening across New England.

"Now we're trying to figure out how to make everybody happy," he said.

Reiner is pushing for the installation of self-regulating tide gates (SRTs), which open up as the harbor's water level rises with the tide — allowing some salt water to enter the marsh — but closes before too much water flows into the marsh, creating a flooding problem.

"It's a win-win situation," Reiner said of the SRTs. "We'll be getting the flood control project we wanted and wildlife and fish will be getting a saltmarsh."

Tutela isn't sold on the SRTs, and also defended the installation of the standard "flapper gates" which open to let water flow out into the harbor, but close to prevent harbor water from flowing into the meadow.

"They were never factored into the grant process," he said of the SRTs. "It was never our understanding they had to be put in."

Tutela said when the town received the grant, he applied for a state permit, through the conservation commission, with the state Department of Environmental Protection. The DEP gave the go-ahead, without giving any indication that additional federal permits would be needed, according to Tutela. "Unbeknownst to us, some people in the DEP were looking at Jacob's Meadow area as a reclamation project," he said.

In fact, the tide gate issue may never have been revisited, if not for Reiner and other state and federal officials noticing them while down in the harbor area for another matter, months later.

"We looked out a window and happened to see these new tide gates," Reiner remembered. "We saw some plans that had said the James Brook Saltmarsh Ecosystem, and I asked some questions, got some answers, and we asked some more questions."

Now, according to officials, the project at hand is figuring out a solution to the problem.

"The town followed the process correctly," Town Manager Mark Haddad said defending Tutela. "It's now important to rectify the situation rather than assign blame."

Tutela has currently installed neoprene "wedges" propping one of the gates open an inch, allowing some salt water to flow into the meadow.

"Right now we're studying the marsh and monitoring the marsh in an effort to find the best solution to get saltwater into the marsh," Penta said.

Tutela has set up staff gauges in three different spots along the meadow and brook, and a report is expected within the next couple of months.

Penta and Tutela said possible solutions could include leaving the wedges in permanently, or requiring the town to install an SRT on one of the outfall pipes, and leaving the other two as flapper gates. "We're open minded," he said.

Reiner insisted the Army Corp of Engineers' or EPA's intent isn't to flood the meadow and bordering homes, instead to keep just enough saltwater in the marsh to maintain the ecosystem and keep the floodplain open. "We have to find a happy medium between ecological integrity and flooding protection."

Broken phragmite stems are seen gathered along the trash rack in James Brook. Some are concerned that if the reeds continue to prosper, flood water drainage from Jacob's Meadow into Cohasset Harbor could be impeded.

Candidates for state representative share their personal sides

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

The three candidates vying for the right to have a Beacon Hill work number for the next two years have taken a play from outgoing state Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray's play book.

Democrat Garrett Bradley, Republican Mary Anne McKenna and independent Walter Murray all say that constituent service is as important in the 3rd Plymouth District as policy issues..

As a result, nearly every resident in Cohasset, Hull and Hingham has had their door knocked on or bell rung by one of the three candidates over the past 10 months..

So with less than 20 days before Election Day, who is behind the smiles and suits? Where did the candidates come from? Who are their influences?

Mary Anne McKenna

McKenna hopes to keep the tradition of having a female Republican represent the residents of Hingham, Hull and Cohasset.

She grew up in Hingham the fourth out of five kids, and is a member of the Hingham High School Class of 1982, where she won the state oratory championship as a freshman and sophomore, and captained the girls' tennis team. Amazingly, everyone of her siblings, including herself, went to college on a tennis scholarship.

"I remember getting up in the morning and shoveling snow off the tennis court in order to practice," she said. With her dad as her instructor, they'd put up their own net, after Hingham had taken the town nets down for the winter.

At UMass-Boston, not only was she the number two tennis player for the Beacons, she was the number two tennis player on the men's team, as there was no women's team. She graduated in 1987 with a degree in English and later received a master's of education in clinical counseling. She also received a certificate in Spanish from the University of Seville in Seville, Spain where she spent a year studying.

After working as a clinical psychologist for adolescents, teens and seniors, she switched gears and is now a pharmaceutical research consultant.

"I work with doctors and hospitals to make sure they're following the proper FDA procedures," she explained. She has also spent time working on past campaigns to elect Rep. Murray, as well as incumbent senator Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth. True to her Republican roots, McKenna counts Ronald Reagan as one of her influences.

"He was steadfast in his values and refused to be swayed,' she said. McKenna also grew up admiring tennis legend Chris Evert, not only for her forehand, but for her work in being a pioneer for women. McKenna also isn't afraid to say she admires Rep. Murray for both her service in the Marine Corps and as a 26-year, female elected official in a profession dominated by men. She hopes to pass some of those lessons on to her 10-year old daughter Maeve.

As for politics, McKenna said it's her way of remaining in the public service sector.

"I have 20 years in public service," she said, "It's something I like to do."

Walter Murray

It took a few years, but independent candidate Walter Murray made it back to the South Shore. He was born in Hingham, and lived there for his first 18 years, but as a senior in high school, he moved to a Philadelphia suburb and graduated from high school down there in 1980. It wasn't until the mid-90's when a "homesick" Murray decided to return to the South Shore to be closer to his family.

In between, Murray fit in a lot.

He tried his hand at acting for a couple of years in New York City, and appeared in a few off-Broadway productions. After moving out to Los Angeles and spending time at a community college, he received his social science/political science degree from Biola University in La Mirada, Calif., in 1993. A master's degree in public policy followed in 1995 from Regent University in Virginia Beach, Va.

During his time away from the South Shore, Murray spent 15 years (1982-1997) in the Army National Guard and in a Army Reserves Special Forces unit, where he earned the rank of squad leader sergeant. "There was a possibility we were going to be sent to the Gulf War, but never were," he said. "We were on standby."

Since returning to the South Shore, his focus has been on the law. Murray will receive his law degree from New England School of Law this December, and take the bar in February.

He currently works for the Greater Boston Legal Services as a legal representative for indigent tenants facing eviction. He also has done work for District Attorney Ralph Martin's office in Dorchester and for the Southeastern Massachusetts Legal Assistance Corporation, giving representation for indigent women who were victims of domestic violence. Murray said he learned a lot in that position, just from drawing up affidavits and motions.

"It was a very emotional, trying experience for me," he said.

The reason Murray is willing to sacrifice his time for the opportunity to represent the South Shore is his "passion and commitment to public service," as he put it. He said the fact he is running again after losing in the Democratic primary in 1998 to Bradley and Hull Selectman Josh Cutler should demonstrate his desire to win.

Murray has been very outspoken in his criticism for there not being a place for a pro-life candidate in the Democratic party. In an interview, he spoke strongly of his Christian background. Murray said though he is "non-denominational" he feels "the center of my life is my strong belief in the Christian faith."

He also said he left the Democratic party because he didn't want to be forced to abide by some "party agenda."

"I do have strong Democratic and Republican leanings, I truly am something else," he said about his non-party affiliation. "This way it's just me and the voters."

Garrett Bradley

Perhaps the best metaphor for Bradley's effort to win Rep. Murray's seat can be taken from his first play in a college football game. As a sophomore walk-on for Boston College, Bradley went in to play special teams on a kickoff against Georgia Tech. "I ran 60 yards down field as hard as I could and this guy took four steps and leveled me," he said.

In 1998, after winning a three-way Democratic primary against Walter Murray and Josh Cutler, Bradley took on then-24-year incumbent Murray, who is a political icon in the district. After spending just under $100,000 in the campaign, and knocking on 10,000 doors, he lost by about 1,100 votes. This time, the Hingham resident spent $60,000 to get by opponent Michael Holden in September, and a poster board in his office says he has once again knocked on more than 10,000 doors this election.

Bradley hopes to avoid getting knocked on his back again in November, but if he does, he won't regret giving up his time over the past year one bit.

"I look at the people I've met on the trail, or that have volunteered for me," said Bradley. "We've talked about some important issues."

Bradley has lived in Hingham since he as 10, the son of two parents "that came from limited means" as he is proud to point out. The oldest of five kids, Bradley is a member of the famed "Triple Eagle Club," having graduated from Boston College High School (1988), Boston College (1992), and Boston College Law School (1995).

Since then he has served the lead prosecutor in Brockton and Hingham District Courts, and now works in a private firm in Boston where he represents workers injured on the job.

It is was his time as a prosecutor when he realized the importance of being a state legislator. "Seeing what I saw, I could only react. I was helping only after someone got in trouble," he explained. "You need to get into the legislature to be proactive." It was that realization, plus his parents' lesson of giving back to the community that guided him into a run for the state legislature in 1998.

Between working in Boston, running a campaign, spending time with his wife Heather and daughter Amanda, Bradley listed his favorite hobby as "sleeping."

But while awake, Bradley says he normally enjoys working in the yard of his Hingham home. "I had some great ideas this year, but they just never got done," he said.

The three candidates squared off in a debate co-sponsored by Community Newspaper Company Wednesday night after the paper went to press. Voters can read all about in the next edition of the Cohasset Mariner.

five school projects in his districts were grandfathered under more generous reimbursement rates and funded a lot earlier than would have occurred under the old formula.

Hedlund also refuted a statement he said Cantwell made during the September debate with his primary election opponent Ted LeClair.

"Jim Cantwell stated 'Gov. Paul Cellucci vetoed $100 million from the School Building Assistance Program.' This is simply not true. Cellucci did not veto any funds for the School Building Assistance Program," Hedlund said.

In addition, Hedlund said that he has led efforts to coordinate and fund the cleanup of the 125-acre Hingham annex and facilitate its transfer to Wompatuck State Park, preserving open space.

"What did Jim Cantwell do to help clean up the annex?" Hedlund said.

There were ample counter-charges from the Cantwell campaign committee.

A press release from the Cantwell campaign on a press conference outside Weymouth Town Hall last week stated that Democratic Beacon Hill legislators joined forces to support Cantwell and volleyed a number of charges at Hedlund.

The legislators charged that Hedlund has been ineffective in helping them secure local aid for their communities and "disruptive" in negotiations with the MBTA to secure mitigation for towns impacted by restoration of the Greenbush commuter rail line. State Rep. Paul Haley, D-Weymouth, said that Hedlund has a "tendency to toss bombs in the middle of delicate negotiations" with the MBTA, thus stymieing progress on this critical issue.

The Democratic legislators also said that Hedlund has failed to shepherd through the Senate many initiatives they'd won in the House, costing constituents hundreds of thousands of dollars in local aid.

Hingham Town Hall is located at 210 Central St. The event, moderated by the League of Women Voters, is free and open to the public. The debate is sponsored in cooperation with WATD-FM, 95.9.

Girls start homecoming off on the right foot

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

Kicking off the 2000 Cohasset Homecoming in grand fashion, the varsity field hockey Lady Skippers picked apart division opponent Norwell for a 4-0 win on Friday in front of a large and delighted home crowd at Alumni Field.

"There was definitely a lot of support," said coach Cohasset coach Debbie Bostwick. "We changed the game time from 3:30 to 5:00 so the parents could come."

The win epitomized a team effort, with all players, starters or reserves, playing well. At one point, Bostwick had seven of her eleven starters on the bench, but the self-proclaimed "B squad" did not miss a beat.

"The girls are not settling for just getting in (to the playoffs). Our goal is to be first in the league."

"Whenever we need them, they come out and give 110%," reported senior captain Sarah Kidder, who was named to the Homecoming Court, and voted "Most Athletic" for yearbook superlatives.

"Everyone on the team, they are all great players," added senior captain Andi Shaughnessy.

Cohasset ties Hanover, 1-1

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Barring what would be a shocking loss from Hanover in either of their remaining two games, it looks like Cohasset will have to settle for second place in the South Shore League.

Tuesday night's showdown for first place ended in a 1-1 tie, which allowed Hanover (11-0-3 and 5-0-1 in league) to remain one point ahead of Cohasset (11-1-2, 5-1-1).

Cohasset got on the board first in this heated battle with 12:48 remaining in the first half, when Kelly Lordan knocked the ball home after a shuffle in front of the net set up by a looping shot from leading scorer Andi Shaugnessy.

Hanover notched the equalizer midway through the second half, however, on a nice shot by Allison Martucci past Skippers' keeper Krysten Considine.

Cohasset's lone loss of the season was a 2-1 setback in Hanover back on Sept. 29. The Lady Skippers have three regular season matches remaining.

Skippers lanced in gallant effort

Gridders fall to 3-3 against unbeaten Norton

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

After dropping their last two games, both to divisional opponents, Cohasset battled against the undefeated Lancers of Norton. And, just as one might expect a league powerhouse to do against a struggling squad, Norton came away with the win, 15-0.

Norton (now 5-0 on the season) has outscored its opponents 145-36, an average of 29 points per game. And while the 15 point margin of this game was the lowest by any opponent this year against Norton, head coach Tony Rolfe wanted something better than simply knowing his team played well.

"We are getting tired of the moral victories," reported Rolfe, who was also pleased with his team's performances in the losses to Abington and Carver the past two weeks. "We played them tough, but not tough enough."

The score was not truly indicative of how tough Cohasset played the Lancers, in particular on the defensive side of the ball. The visiting Norton squad clung to a mere eight point advantage until Kenyatta Hale broke loose for a 61 yard touchdown run with less than a minute left in the game, at which time Cohasset had abandoned its normal defensive set in an increased effort to force a turnover.

"The one at the end, we were taking a gamble," said Rolfe, referring to the late TD. "We were just trying to strip the ball."

The Skippers came closest to putting points on the board midway through the first quarter with the game still scoreless. The drive began when sophomores Cosimo Cambi and Ben Lynner forced and recovered a Lancer fumble, respectively.

With the offense taking over, sophomore Brawn Goodson, on his first run of the season, picked up 25 yards to bring the Skippers close to midfield. After a few short gains on the ground, a Norton penalty brought the ball down to the five yard line. But the Lancer defense held strong, forcing a turnover on downs as the first quarter expired.

"You always get scoring opportunities, and you have to take advantage," declared Rolfe. "And we just didn't."

Cohasset did take a couple positives out of the game. First, junior utility player Nick Bolster returned from a knee injury to reclaim his roles as wide receiver, cornerback, punter and punt returner. Despite his bad knee, the Norton special teams unit showed great respect for him by booting every one of their punts out of bounds.

"Only a fool would kick it to him," said Rolfe, pointing to Bolster's early success on punt returns, with two returned for touchdowns and a third called back.

Another positive of the game was the spread of offensive production. The Skippers amassed close to 100 rushing yards split among five backs: Goodson, juniors Paul Previte, Liam Martin and Jason Brown, and senior Brian Krupczak, who was voted "Most Athletic" for yearbook superlatives later that night as part of the Homecoming festivities.

Being Cohasset's Homecoming game, the entire senior class was invited onto the field at halftime to recognize the King and Queen, Erik Shea and Andi Shaughnessy (standouts on the soccer and field hockey teams, respectively).

Unfortunately, Rolfe found the Homecoming festivities to be more of a disturbance.

"It's a distraction more than anything else," said Rolfe, making reference to the large crowd. "Ask any coach in the league, and they will tell you the same thing."

With four games left in the season, all against divisional opponents, and a definite shot to finish at least .500, the Skippers should be in for an exciting final month.

Girls soccer team gets a shake up

By Lou Molinari
CORRESPONDENT

There was a line from a Patrick Swayze movie when he said, "It's my way or the highway." The line worked for Mr. Swayze in the movie and it appears Cohasset High girls soccer coach Deb Beal is borrowing it as the season runs out the string.

As of Tuesday, the Cohasset team was 1-11-2 for the season, so a little apathy among some of the players may have set in.

"I had to lay down the rules to the players," reported Beal. "I asked them if they wanted to finish the season strong or what? If they wanted the what, I didn't need them."

To that end, Coach Beal has called up five players from the junior varsity who wanted to play soccer and finish strong.

"I had to lay down the rules to the players. I asked them if they wanted to finish the season strong or what? If they wanted the what, I didn't need them."
Cohasset girls' soccer coach Deb Beal

"So far it appears to be a good move," said Beal." The five players have shown me a lot and they show a lot of promise for the future."

Following Monday's 1-0 loss to Chatham, the Cohasset team had four games remaining for the sea-

6th grade, 7th grade, and 8th grade girls may try out for the Cohasset Travelling Teams. There will be three teams.

The teams wear gear of Cohasset uniforms, learn both offensive and plays and compete in the metro-west Old Colony League. The teams are formed by Ellen Carr, Head coach of the Cohasset High School Varsity and Junior Varsity teams.

Last year our 6th grade team fought from fourth place overall to second to play in the championship. The boys presently hold second position in an outstanding game by game record. All three teams played hard all year long.

Most importantly, all teams gained valuable competitive playing time and learned high school skills and plays.

The teams practice evenings during the week and play games on the weekends, typically home games till the high school on Sundays and away games on Saturdays.

For try-out times and more information, call League Coordinator, Dan Betz at 383-0813.

Wrestling clinic- open mat grades 7-12

The Cohasset Recreation Department is pleased to announce an open mat wrestling clinic to be held at Cohasset High School gym on Tuesday and Thursday evenings, from 6:00 PM - 8:00 PM starting Tuesday, October 3, 2000. Registrations will be held at the first meeting on October 3, for grades 7-12.

This program will be instructed by area high school wrestling coaches and is open to both Cohasset and non-residents. The fee for the 7-week 14 session clinic is $20 per participant. Checks should be made payable to Town of Cohasset.

Creative Dance Classes

Tuesday, 10 to 11 a.m., ages 3 to 5, 1:15 to 2:15 p.m., ages 5 to 6. Thursday, 10 to 11 a.m., ages 3 to 5, 1:15 to 2:15 a.m., ages 5 to 6. $32 per month, no registration fee.

Also offering Mom & Me Classes (15 week session $129.00) at 55 So. Main St (rear), behind the Red Lion Inn.

For further information please contact Becky Ford at 545-0917.

Fitness Center Hours

The Fitness Center at Cohasset High School will be open to the public for use and/or registration during the following days/hours, until we attain 125 members:

tion of the year, coming on the first play of the game from scrimmage.

- The Lancers committed 14 penalties, while the Skippers were flagged just two times.

- After Norton's first touchdown, a 40-yard run by David Glassman, theLancers faked the PAT attempt and Tim Jardin, the kicker, successfully ran the ball in for two points.

- Previte carried the ball four times in the game, three were for first downs.

- With Hale's nine scores on the season, and Glassman's seven, they are the highest scoring tandem in Division 4.

Tennis lesson benefits American Cancer Society

The Cohasset Tennis & Squash Club of Cohasset is hosting a Lessons for Life tennis event to raise money to help fund the search for a cancer cure.

Owner Kathy Pocock and tennis professionals Jan Bickford and John Voikos will host their special event benefiting the American Cancer Society as part of a national program sponsored by the United States Professional Tennis Association. The program begun in 1999, raised more than $55,000 for ACS in its first year. This year's goal is $100,000.

Players of all levels are invited to join the fun at the Cohasset Tennis & Squash Club from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. Saturday, Oct. 21. Instead of paying the tennis professional for the lesson, participants will be asked to make their checks payable to the American Cancer Society. All contributions will be given to a local chapter of the ACS. In addition to on-court instruction, there will be "skill-challenge" events, prizes donated by Wilson Sporting Goods, T-shirts to all donors (first come, first served), and gift certificates from Good Sports Sporting Goods in Cohasset.

A similar event will be hosted by the Hatherly Country Club in Scituate at their tennis courts the same day, same times. Head pro Kent Parrot and other teaching professionals will be on hand.

USPTA is the world's oldest and largest nonprofit organization of tennis-teaching professionals with more than 12,500 members worldwide. American Cancer Society is the association's official charity.

For more information about USPTA's Lessons for Life, call either the Tennis & Squash Club, (781) 383-9533; Kent Parrot, Tennis Professional at Hatherly Tennis Club, (781) 545-9891; or the USPTA World Headquarters at 1-800-USPTA-4U. Head of the Weir River Race

The Hull Lifesaving Museum will sponsor the Weir River Race on Sat. Oct. 28. Race start time is 1 p.m. Registration will begin at 11 a.m. behind the Hull Public Works building at the Hull Town Line on Route 228. Entry fee is $15.

One of the museum's hallmark events, The Head of the Weir chases the tide out the Weir River estuary and into the open water from West Corner (on Hingham/Hull/Cohasset line), past Bumpkin Island, to the museum's Windmill Point Boathouse.

A highly contested five-and-a-half-miler, the Weir draws coxed youth and adult crews, single and double scullers, curraghs, and Alden ocean shells. It features more than 100 of the region's finest rowers, including youth and adult crews from Boston Harbor, Maine, Vermont, and New York.

Best views are from the bridge on George Washington Blvd. (5-15 minutes after the start), at the tip of Hull's sunset point, or at the boathouse finish line. Spectators should show great care crossing the road on George Washington Blvd.—watch for fast moving traffic.

For more information, call Ed McCabe, maritime program director at the Hull Lifesaving Museum at (781) 925-5433, fax (781) 925-0992;. email: hullmuse@channell.com.

Field hockey team comes home to a victory

Homecoming Queen, scored her second hat trick of the year, bringing her team leading goal total to 15. She is now looking at colleges where she can extend her field hockey playing career.

Despite the impressive numbers, however, Shaughnessy has maintained a modest profile.

"I felt honored that the senior class chose four people to represent our grade, and I was one of them," she said humbly.

Bostwick on the other hand, is extremely proud of her players' accomplishments.

"Three goals: that's legit, that's respectable for a game," understated the 14th year field hockey coach.

Kelly Lordan (voted "Class Astronaut" for superlatives) scored once to bring her second best team total to eight and added an assist. Kidder posted her seventh and eighth assists of the year, while sophomore Heather Peraino also registered a helper.

Senior goalie Krysten Considine, voted "Class Spaz" along with Dan Duffy, played as brilliantly as she has all season, stopping all seven of the Lady Clippers' shots.

With a mind-boggling nine shutouts through 13 games, and allowing a mere six goals the entire season, Considine remains tied in both categories with Hanover's Lisa Bellantoni. They are widely considered the top two netminders in the league.

The defense has played no small part in the low goal yield. Utilizing terrific overall speed, this unit has dominated nearly every offense. Ashley Ulmer (winner of the "Best Combination of Beauty and Brains" category along with Homecoming King Erik Shea) and Karen McMorris (top vote getter for "Class Couple" with John Hertig) have led the defensive charge all year.

"Ashley's drives have gotten much better," appraised Bostwick. "And Karen... you just couldn't get by her."

Senior Lydia Guild, voted "Friendliest," played a strong game at the sweeper position.

Not to be outdone, Kelly Devine, another team captain named to the Homecoming Court, played an excellent game on the attacking end.

"Kelly had a really improved her stick work game," reported Bostwick.

The fact that all three of the captains were voted into the Homecoming Court meant a lot to Coach Bostwick, who has had at least one player in the Court every year in her fourteen year career.

"It put her in a good mood, and put us in a good mood," joked Kidder.

"They are great role models, well liked girls, and they work hard at anything they do," effused Bostwick.

The varsity squad was not the only field hockey team to win this past weekend however, as the junior varsity team blanked Norwell's minors, 3-0.

The Lady Skippers could not help but be fired up for their Homecoming, with the game time merely hours after the spirited Pep Rally.

"After Spirit Week and Pep Rally, everyone was really excited to play," reported Kidder. "We just wanted to show our fans what we can do."

This season has been devoted to the late Clark Chatterton— Cohasset's longtime Athletic Director who succumbed to cancer this summer, and a man whose warm personality brightened this town's athletic programs for over three decades— by the coaches and players. Recently, the South Shore League named their athletic Sportsmanship Award after Chatterton to honor him.

"This season is dedicated to Mr. Chatterton because he was always there for us, and we want to do the same for him," said Shaughnessy.

Chatterton predicted that this group of players would be the one to put a banner in his gymnasium. And with their record standing at 11-1-1 (5-1 in league play), Cohasset has already clinched a spot in the post season state tourney.

But with games this week against Hanover and Notre Dame, the only teams against whom Cohasset could not come away with a win, the Lady Skippers also find themselves with the possibility of a league title.

"The girls are not settling for just getting into [the playoffs]," declared Bostwick. "Our goal is to be first in the league."

With four games left on the regular season schedule before the playoffs, the Lady Skippers will attempt to continue their success, and hope it carries through into the tournament. According to their coach, the team has all the ingredients necessary for doing just this.

Summed up Bostwick: "We've got classy, good looking girls out there that know how to play field hockey."

son, starting with Ursuline Academy Tuesday.

Abington was next up for a Thursday game, with a return match against Chatham Monday and a season ender against Hanover on Friday.

As for next season, things are looking good, especially with goalie Kelly Holway anchoring the team. Holway is just a sophomore, and she's very good.

"Kelly has been awesome for us all season long," said Coach Beal. "She has been under terrific pressure back there but she has been holding up well. "She just keeps getting better and better with every game, and the beauty of it is she's a sophomore. She's part of our fixture."

The coach continued: "Right now, I want to finish the season strong. I'm looking to the future, and people like Holway and the five junior varsity players are part of it. Anybody that wants to play the game and shows up for practice is welcome to come along."

Last week was a downer for the Cohasset team. The Lady Skippers lost to Carver, 4-1, lost the next one to Hull, 3-1 and lost to Mashpee, 3-0.

Despite the string of losses, Coach Beal wants the kids to hang tough and finish the season strong.

It's her way.

Hanover High, Cohasset's final opponent of the season, is leading the South Shore League standings with a 9-0-1 record. Norwell was in second place at 8-2-1.

Abington High, Cohasset's Thursday opponent, was in third place with a 5-2-2 record. Two of Cohasset's final four games are against South Shore League teams, two very strong teams.

When it was pointed out who her final season opponent was, the coach simply said, "I know who it is and we're going to play them as strong as we can, just as I intend to play every game remaining on the schedule."

It's her way.

Faith, love of family sustains Cheryl Bergeron

Bergeron is convinced that she can beat the disease. She walks around with an air of confidence and happiness regarding her life.

"I don't know. I'm different in how I'm handling 'all of this,'" she said. "Many people have told me that before. The thing is, I'm just happy when I'm with people that I like. No, I'm not happy with the cancer, but I'm happy with my friends and my family, and that's what counts. People tell me they think it's strange that I don't complain that much, but what's the sense in complaining?"

On her optimistic outlook, she added, "My choices in life are limited — I could be bedridden, I could be dead, or I can get up and do as much as I possibly can to make myself feel better. Yes, I'm dealing with cancer, but I'm still here five years after I was diagnosed with it."

Bergeron found out she had breast cancer after a physically painful incident took place in her home. On May 31, 1995, she was walking across her kitchen floor and before she knew it, she was flat on her back, on the floor.

Bergeron said she was in extreme pain at the time, unable to stand up. She dragged herself about 12 feet so she could reach her telephone — it took her about 90 minutes to do just that. During the incident, Bergeron convinced herself she must have a shattered hip or something.

She was wrong.

When Bergeron went to Beth Israel Hospital in Boston following the painful hip incident, she was told she had breast cancer, and she was told that it had spread into her bones and into other areas.

After she had surgery on her hip, Bergeron had radiation treatment on her head and her hip. In 1996, she had radiation treatment done on her breast tumor. She also underwent chemotherapy sessions until November of that year. During that time, she was confined to a wheelchair, and some skeptics told her she would remain that way.

She didn't.

"Skeptics thought that I would be getting around in a wheelchair and using crutches the rest of my life," she said. "Now, all I need is a single cane." Bergeron can now get around as well as anybody.

Since 1996 Bergeron has been on cancer drugs such as Tamoxifin and Taxol. She had her last chemotherapy session in May.

"There's all kinds of options for different (cancer) drugs to take," Bergeron said. "The doctors just give people what they think will help a given cancer patient the most."

Now, Bergeron still takes extra health precautions. She has frequent bone scans performed on her, and she visits her orthopedic surgeon twice a year. She also practices holistic medicine techniques like meditation, and exercises her upper body four days a week.

"I'll be exercising with weights up until February," she said. "I don't go over 30 pounds on my legs, and I don't go more than five pounds on my arms. Using the weights is not for the purpose of building up muscle—it's simply to keep them working properly."

Bergeron also keeps herself occupied by playing different board games, by knitting and crocheting, and by attending a breast cancer support group at South Shore Hospital in Weymouth.

"It's a fabulous support group," she said. "I am supported by the people in that group, and I also give support. I also enjoy being with my friends and family."

Bergeron said her friends and family worry a great deal, but they are impressed with her bright outlook on the whole situation.

"My family just wants me to be healthy," she said. "When it was first discovered that I was sick, it was tough to convince them that I would be with this disease the rest of my life — my cancer is stable right now, but it hasn't gone away. Being in my bones, I will always have it. Hopefully, one day, there will be a cure, but right now, there isn't. I just have to keep going. For me, time is not an issue. I'm a fighter. I am a survivor."

property line of the nearest house, a reading of 50 decibels was recorded both with the music on and off. The report said noise from traffic alone on South Main Street ranged from 55 to 65 decibels.

"We have evaluated the Lilac House function room...and determined that the sound from electrified musical instruments, such as what might be played at a wedding reception or social gathering, does not introduce sound greater than the natural existing sound, particularly on the south side," Butler concluded in his report.

South Main Street resident John Bertolami questioned whether the sound level tested was the equivalent of what is played by a live band, and suggested maybe a louder level should be tested.

"If you can sit in a room with 95 decibel music for three hours, then I'll retest it," Ordelheide responded.

Board chairman Thomas Callahan said he had received complaints of noise coming from the Lilac House from either open windows or open doors, over the summer. Ordelheide said the door leading from the walkway to the function room didn't originally have an automatic closer on it, but now does. He promised that the door will be kept locked during functions so it won't be opened and also guaranteed the windows will be kept closed.

Callahan moved that amplified music be allowed, but in accordance to the noise regulations imposed by the city of Boston — where music or noise can not be audible from a public way, without the place being in violation. Cohasset does not have any formal noise regulations.

The board also said it will attempt to apply similar standards to the ones given to the Red Lion Inn and Lilac House, to the rest of Cohasset's restaurants when licenses are reviewed in December.

Let's make a difference in our schools

SCHOOL'S IN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

Attention parents, neighbors and friends of the Cohasset Osgood and Deer Hill Schools! Here is an opportunity to show your child another way you can make a difference in their lives! On Saturday, Oct. 28, "Make A Difference Day" will be in full swing at the Joseph Osgood School and the Deer Hill School. Make a Difference Day is a national event sponsored by USA Weekend Magazine in Partnership with the Points of Light Foundation in an effort to show the power of one person to make a difference. This year, there will be plenty of opportunities for parents and students to help out at both schools. The PSO will organize playground maintenance: sidewalk games will be repainted, safety mats will be laid, picnic tables will be stained and the mulch will be raked. At the Deer Hill School, the focus is also on the outdoor play space. The bike racks need to be fixed and painted, two new picnic tables will be assembled and painted, a volleyball net will be installed and safety mats will be positioned under the swing area. There will also be a few painting projects and an opportunity to work on the Nature Trail behind the Deer Hill and Osgood Schools. Come on over and "Make a Difference" at our schools.

Our PSO Fall Fundraiser was a great success for our schools. Thank you to all who participated in the program. The proceeds from our gift wrap sales fund valuable enrichment programs for the current school year. Congratulations go out to our raffle winner, fourth-grader Maggie McGoldrick, who wins tickets to a Boston event of her choice. Thank you also, to all who helped make this fundraising success happen: Katie Dunn, Meg Sullivan, Mary Mastromarino, Janet Rattenbury, Mal McCunney, Meredith Hayes and Susan Jaffe. Signed, Your PSO Fundraising Committee: Janeen Culhane, Karen Doonan, Susan Hernon and Jennifer Piepenbrink

Please remember to mark on your calendars the METCO Annual Fall Dinner being held on Sunday, Nov. 5 at the Cohasset High School, from 3-6 p.m. Please call Olivia Baldwin at 383-1866 or Allison Moskow at 383-9242 for more information.

With Halloween fast approaching, here are some helpful hints and tips on how to make this a fun and happy day and evening. Because Halloween falls on a school night, please try to have your children in the house at a reasonable hour. Also, make sure that you know your children's plans for the evening and that you explain to them the importance of not causing any problems or damaging anyone's property. Although we can all remember (most of us, anyway) what it was like to be a child on Halloween, we also had some pretty serious consequences if the behavior get out of hand. By working together and creating a united front with other parents, the Cohasset police and our kids, we can have a Halloween that we can be proud of and that can be enjoyed by all. Happy Haunting!

As you may know, their have been several traffic challenges at the Deer Hill and new Osgood School at the beginning and end of each day. The following are some traffic guidelines that will help to make the safety of the children a top priority and help the process of drop-off and pick-up time run smoothly. Please take the time to read and review them.

1. Traffic by the Deer Hill School-All traffic to and from the Osgood School uses the Deer Hill Driveway. Please use extreme caution entering and exiting the driveway from Sohier Street to the Osgood front door. Remember that it is a driveway and the maximum speed is 15 mph. No children will be dismissed to walk to the Deer Hill from the Osgood for parent pick up!

2. Buses with flashing lights are stopped for a reason! It is against the law to pass a bus at any time the it has the lights flashing. When a bus is loading or unloading children, please use extreme caution.

3. Parent Morning Drop-off begins at the Osgood at 8:50. am. Please drop your child off at the playground door and keep moving. Make the goodbyes as brief as possible, as this is a moving traffic line. Any delay holds up other parents and the incoming buses.

When you are picking up your child at the end of the day, be prepared to have to wait. Stay to the left of the driveway until you enter the parking area and then get into one of the two lines. Do not stop and get out of your car at this time. This is also a moving line, and is for the pick up of your child. There is space for eight-to-10 cars to move up into the playground area at a time. When this group gets all the children in their cars, they will leave and the next group is allowed to move up. If everyone follows the procedure, it will help to keep things moving along for buses and parents who drop-off and pick-up.

That is all we have for this week. Make sure to get all pictures, news and events to me at jenpiep@yahoo.com, (781)923-1057 or 622 CJC Highway. Even if you just want to send the news and the dates it is happening, I can write the piece. If you know of a teacher or person who is doing something above and beyond to enhance what they are teaching, or you were on a field trip or at a special event and have pictures, please send them in. This column is for the schools to shine in, we have some wonderful and amazing programs going on in the schools and this is a way to let everyone who is interested hear about. Have a great week!

The Cohasset Board of Health and the Social Service League of Cohasset announced senior flu clinics will be held Thursday, Oct. 26, for those 65 and older, and Tuesday, Nov. 7, for seniors 65 and older and people with chronic health problems. Clinics will be held from 10 a.m. to noon at the Second Congregational Church (next to Cohasset Town Hall).

A clinic will be held Friday, Nov. 10, for seniors 65 and older, from 10 a.m. to noon, at Harborview Senior Housing, 60 Elm St.

Please wear a short-sleeved shirt.

For more information call the Social Service League at 383-0771.

Town clinics will be held later in November.

Safe driving

In addition to all the ongoing programs, "55-Alive" is being offered Dec. 7 and 14 at the community center. It is a program sanctioned by AARP. Its focus is to make participants aware of what may have become bad driving habits. So many older drivers who limit themselves to just driving locally, and are reluctant to give that up, will have a renewed sense of confidence and ability. The speaker is Cal White from Plymouth. Videos and question and answer are part of the program. Call the office for details, 383-9112.

Water board, Con Com, Barry spar over jurisdiction of CHL

By Rick Collins
rcollins@cnc.com

Who has jurisdiction over leachate seeping from the Cohasset Heights Landfill?

The town's water commission says the conservation commission has the authority to determine whether the discharge violates the town's wetlands bylaws.

But an attorney for CHL, which is owned by Cohasset resident Paul Barry, thinks otherwise.

In a hearing before the commission last week, Michelle O'Brien argued that either the state's Department of Environmental Protection or Cohasset Board of Health is empowered to determine whether the landfill is endangering the town's water supply.

The hearing was called after the water commission asked the conservation commission to declare CHL in violation of a town bylaw passed last December that prohibits leachate from a solid-waste landfill from discharging into the watershed area of the town's drinking water supply.

In his presentation before the conservation commission, Mark Bartlett, an environmental engineer with Norfolk Environmental – consultants hired by the water commission, said approximately 75 percent of the landfill is in a designated watershed district. He also said high levels of both organic and inorganic compounds were found in the groundwater and surface water of test pits bored in the area around the landfill.

And though the levels of chemicals found have shown some signs of decreasing since the landfill was closed, "they're there," he said.

However, O'Brien, the attorney Barry, argued that, because the landfill was under the auspices of the DEP when it closed in 1998, the DEP or Board of Health should have jurisdiction over the landfill, and any possible environmental concerns. She also said the town should instead focus its energy on getting CHL's closure plan finalized after two years of negotiations.

"Capping CHL will have an effect on the leachate," she said. "I think instead you should support CHL in its efforts to cap and close it."

Board of Health chairman Stephen Bobo agreed with O'Brien. He told the conservation commission it should "concentrate on greater areas of need," such as preventing septic leachate from reaching Peppermint Brook, in the Beechwood section of town.

He said the town's first priority should be on capping CHL, citing the impact rain has on contaminants being washed down from the landfill into the watershed.

Selectman Thomas Callahan, a past chairman of the conservation commission, who lent "historical perspective" to the issue, said the commission "clearly has jurisdiction" when leachate threatens a watershed area.

"Capping CHL will have an effect on the leachate. I think instead you should support CHL in its efforts to cap and close it."
—Michelle O'Brien, attorney for CHL

He also said the issue should be a moot one because of a prior ruling regarding leachate from the landfill. Callahan pointed out that in 1994, the landfill, while still open, received a letter of violation from the conservation commission regarding leachate "damaging" and "polluting" the adjacent wetlands area. "There is an outstanding enforcement order on this issue," Callahan concluded.

Barry said the issue wasn't "cut and dry," that leachate found near his property can also belong to the MassHighway property and former Norfolk Conveyor factory site located adjacent to CHL.

"I think you need to look at that [the surrounding sites] as well," he said. "This leaves for some cloudiness."

Bartlett didn't doubt that some of the inorganic compounds found such as chloride could have come from other places, but said some of the organic contaminants found were "typical landfill contaminants."

Before the hearing got too bogged down in scientific data, commission member Jim Dedes attempted to refocus the hearing. "The technical [aspect] can come later," he said. "Right now what we need is a clear and concise argument as to why we have jurisdiction."

When the hearing, which was only supposed to last half an hour, started pushing the 60-minute mark, acting chairman Deborah Cook continued it to the commission's Nov. 30 meeting.

The former Edison site off North Main Street could be developed into condominiums.

Edison site project could move along

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Developer Noel Collins tried to extend an olive branch at a recent planning board meeting in hopes to begin the process of tearing down one of Cohasset's worst eyesores.

Collins looks to construct five, single-level units of senior housing at the site of the former Brockton Edison site on North Main Street. Once the site of the town's energy supply, the property's three buildings have long-been abandoned and dilapidated.

"Leaving what's there won't benefit anyone," said board chairman Al Moore at the meeting.

Though both sides want to do something with the property, Collins' plan has been placed in limbo, due to lawsuits regarding the timing of a Zoning Board of Appeal decision denying him relief.

The board — while recognizing the need for senior housing in town — had previously expressed concern that approval for a project like this would set a precedent for high density in a residential area.

The 51,000 square foot parcel is currently owned by Lawrence Notarangelo of Hull. Collins, and partner Anthony Catlin, is looking to purchase 21,000 square feet of the property and construct five 1,200 square feet, one bedroom condos. However, because the zoning requirements for the property call for only single-family homes, Collins went before the ZBA seeking a variance, which they subsequently denied, but not without controversy.

"The ZBA failed to deliver a decision within 100 days," Collins contends. Under state law, if the board fails to make a ruling within 100 days, a constructive permit is granted. However, the ZBA filed its decision days later, and said it was within the time limits because Collins's original proposal was incomplete.

"The relief he sought originally was vague and unactionable," ZBA chairman Woody Chittick explained. He said only when Collins clarified his request did the "clock start ticking."

Nonetheless, Collins appealed the decision to the appellate court, where it remains waiting to be heard. The planning board also filed a "friendly suit" against the Collins and the ZBA appealing the constructive grant.

At the planning board meeting, Collins met with the planning board in an effort to reach an out of court settlement of the appeal.

Moore and board member Chris Ford and Terry Atherton were receptive to the peace offering, and ultimately voted unanimously to drop the suit providing Collins meets a number of conditions.

Collins quickly agreed to the board's requirement for an "over 55" housing designation, and for approval by the town's design and review board. However, he expressed reservations about other requirements that would call for Collins buying all 51,000 square feet and a full site plan review.

Regarding the request to keep the parcel together, rather than subdividing it, Collins called it unnecessary because of the condition of the other 30,000 acres not taken up by the housing. "Their concern is they don't want to see the lots overburdened and overbuilt...and I think that's reasonable," he said, adding, "But it's a moot point. One glance would reveal it's a vernal pool." He said by having to purchase the, in his opinion, undevelopable land, it would add "undue expense" to the project.

Collins also said that if the accord doesn't include the ZBA, he'll have no interest in going through the site plan review.

But Chittick said the board plans to give no quarter.

"He needs certain permission from the planning board separate from the ZBA. Without that [approval from the ZBA] he can't do anything. In the meantime our decision prevails and it will stand unless the court overturns it," said Chittick. "And we intend to defend our position vigorously."

Collins said if he gets full approval, he hopes to build one building, that houses five single, bedroom condos. Each condo would have its own garage and storage space underneath, with a door leading to a main lobby. A gurney-sized elevator will help residents up to their custom-built condo. He expects the condos to run upwards of $300,000.

Collins previously helped set the stage for a condo complex built a few years ago on South Main Street on the former site of the "Quonset huts," which was another town eyesore.

He said he has received full backing from abutters for his North Main Street project.

The town's water commission plans to ask Monday's special Town Meeting for authorization to spend upwards of $900,000 for water system repairs.

But commission chairman John McNabb thinks the money won't have to come out of water users' pocketbooks.

The total cost of all the needed repairs is $927,400. A monetary surplus from last year, and other internal cash transfers would cover more than $100,000 of the cost, leaving just over $800,000 to be borrowed. According to McNabb the loan's debt service could be paid for over 10 years in part by the $234,000 state grant it received in August. The grant was a lump-sum payment in lieu of small, yearly grants to help pay for the water treatment plant built in 1978.

McNabb said the board created a capital repair plan in 1995 based on water flow test results.

"The plan in 1995 was based on flow tests to determine areas with problems," he said. "Since then, we've done a substantial amount of work which changes the characteristics [of the system] a little...We've improved some areas but that can have the effect of taking water from other areas.

"We figured five years was good time to do flow tests again."

Among the work to be done is the cleaning and relining of certain water mains around town, after tests showed area fire hydrants weren't getting sufficient water flow. Fire hydrants at Beechwood Street at Doane Street, Border Street at Parker Avenue, Elm Street at Border Street, Hillside Drive and Rustic Drive at Linden Drive, all demonstrated lower than the required water flow rate at that site.

At Border Street, for example, a water flow of 1,500 gallons of water per minute is required, but when tested this summer, registered just 351 gallons.

McNabb called the proposed repairs "critical to be done now," in order to stay ahead of the curve. "We need to get ahead of things at the plant. We're now replacing things as they break," he said. "What we did was reorder our priorities."

McNabb submitted a list of five repairs to selectmen at its September 10 meeting:

- $253,200 to clean and reline of the Beechwood Street water main, between Route 3A and Riverview Drive.
- $211,700 to clean and line the Elm and Summer Street water mains.
- $102,500 to replace the existing six-inch pipe on Border Street with a 10-inch pipe.
- $140,000 to either replace the six-inch pipe on Rustic Drive with a 10-inch pipe, or loop the line around via Linden Drive.
- $220,000 to repair the Lily Pond water plant's settling basins and sludge collection system.

The article will be voted on as part of a 29-item warrant for the Oct. 23 town meeting. It will be held at 7 p.m. at the middle/high school auditorium.

AD hopes to hire athletic trainer

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Anyone who has gone through a rehabilitation period knows seeing the same doctor or physical therapist provides some consistency and background while dealing with the injury.

Acting athletic director Ron Ford hopes to bring that same consistency to Cohasset Middle/High School athletes. Sometime within the next year, Ford plans to bring onboard a part-time athletic trainer to deal with the numerous bumps, scrapes and sprains Cohasset's student-athletes endure every season.

Ford, who has taken over the reins as head of athletics from the late Clark Chatterton, sees hiring an athletic trainer rather than using EMTs, as a smart move both financially and physically.

Currently, Ford has $5,900 budgeted for medical services for the fall sports season, which is spent hiring EMTs to cover varsity-level games. Massachusetts Interscholastic Athletic Association (MIAA) rules require either an EMT, an athletic trainer or licensed physician at all football and ice hockey games. South Shore League rules require coverage for soccer and field hockey games.

He told the school committee at its recent meeting that, rather than hire EMTs to cover just varsity games, he could spend $5,000 by hiring a part-time athletic trainer to work approximately 200 hours a season, and who would be able to provide more services for the athletic program.

"Financially it makes a lot of sense," Ford said. "Anyone that comes into a new position is going to look and try things different. I'm going to look at the money we have budgeted and see how we can get more for that money...[With an athletic trainer] not only could I get coverage for varsity, JV and middle school games, I could also get practice day coverage in which you have somebody on site for an hour or two and working with the coaches and physical therapists treating and rehabbing and being an advocate for the students."

> "There would be an increased amount of contact time and service time. You have one person that gets to know the kids and know the coaches."
> — acting athletic director Ron Ford

Ford added that injured students would benefit from seeing the same person in the training room, rather than a "revolving door" of EMTs. "There would be an increased amount of contact time and service time," he said. "You have one person that gets to know the kids and know the coaches."

Right now, injured athletes are treated on a day-to-day basis by one of three trained EMTs on the coaching staff: football, basketball and track coach Mark Hall, football head coach Bob Sylvia, and soccer coach Deb Beal. Ford said Hall does most of the tape jobs required, but added that every coach has taped a sprained ankle, including himself.

For hockey games, the rinks provide an EMT as part of the ice charge, and for football, the athletic department hires Cohasset doctor Steven Golden.

Ford was adamant in saying his decision to switch from EMTs to an athletic trainer should not be viewed in any way as a commentary on the treatment athletes have received. "No way should this be looked upon as a slight to the EMTs. They do a terrific job. They've been terrific about coming up and filling in," he said. Rather, he thinks it's an opportunity to hire a more specialized person to deal with the injuries associated with day-to-day physical exertion.

"An EMT is someone trained in emergency response, dealing with trauma, dealing with life and death situations...but an athletic trainer is more geared towards sports injuries and how to treat them. Their focus isn't on emergency response, it's on sports injuries."

Right now, if one of Cohasset High School's 150 athletes was to be injured during a game, he or she would be evaluated by an EMT, who could send for an ambulance, if needed. If a rehabilitation period is required, the coaches would deal directly with an area physical therapist. With an athletic trainer, that person would make the initial evaluation, and then work with a physical therapist in establishing a rehabilitation routine. Ford said he has on occasion sent athletes to be evaluated by Hingham athletic trainer Al Blaisdell.

Ford said the going rate for athletic trainers is approximately $25 an hour. He expects the person he hires to be fairly young. "High schools usually hire someone coming out of school, or more and more, are working in a private practice.," said Ford. He explained that Blaisdell works in his private practice during the day and then goes to Hingham High School in the afternoon. "It would be great if someone had their own practice, but realistically it will be someone young."

Because he is contracting out the part-time position, as opposed to bringing on someone full-time, he doesn't need school committee approval. "There will be no increase in the budget," Ford said. But don't expect an athletic trainer to be prowling the sidelines during the school's annual Thanksgiving Day game with Hull. Ford said more than likely he won't hire anyone until the spring, maybe even the fall.

"It's a direction we're going to move in the future," he said. "It's just a matter of finding the right person."

Alleged drug activity leads to four arrests

Cohasset police observed a drug transaction at about 1:30 a.m., Sunday, Oct. 15 that led to four arrests, police chief Brian Noonan said. The alleged incident occurred in the Walgreen's parking lot at Shaw's Plaza.

Police said after observing the transaction, the suspects left the parking lot in different directions. They stopped the alleged buyer, Jordan M. Lonborg, 18, of 498 First Parish Road in Scituate, and recovered some marijuana from his person. Lonborg was charged with possession of marijuana and conspiracy to violate the drug laws.

Police later arrested the alleged seller Ryan M. Goff, age 20, 4 Pine Ridge Road, Cohasset. During the arrest, police recovered some marijuana, a scale, $414 in cash, a cellular telephone and glass pipe. Goff was charged with: distribution of a Class D substance (marijuana), possession of a Class D substance with intent to distribute; possession of a Class D substance; and conspiracy to violate drug laws. Police believe Goff had been selling marijuana in the area for several months.

Also arrested were Michael J. Sadler, 18, of 18 Elm Court, Cohasset, who was charged with possession of a Class D substance and conspiracy to violate drug laws and Hayley S. Stelzer, 17, of 34 Hollett St., Scituate, who was charged with conspiracy to violate drug laws.

The suspects were arraigned on the charges Monday at Quincy District Court. Sadler and Goff will return to court Nov. 17 for a pretrial conference, Sgt. Robert Jackson said. The charges of conspiracy to violate drug laws were dismissed against Stelzer and Lonborg. The charge of possession of marijuana against Lonborg was continued without a finding for six months, which means if Lonborg stays out of trouble, the charge will be dismissed at that time, Jackson said. Lonborg and Stelzer had to pay $50 in court costs. Lonborg was also required to pay $35 to the victim witness fund, police said.

OBITUARIES

Catherine Mulcahy

Catherine (Walsh) Mulcahy, 93, of Cohasset, a retired school principal, died Oct. 9, 2000, at South Shore Hospital, Weymouth, after a brief illness.

Mrs. Mulcahy became principal of the Joseph Osgood School in the 1970s. She was a Cohasset teacher since the 1950s.

Born and educated in Lowell, she moved to Cohasset in 1938.

Wife of the late Bernard H. Mulcahy, she leaves two sons, Richard Mulcahy of Oakton, Va., and Lawrence Mulcahy of West Springfield; two daughters, Maureen O'Meara of Glencoe, Ill., and Kathleen Mulcahy of Hingham; 16 grandchildren; and five great-grandchildren. She was mother of the late Bernard L. Mulcahy.

A funeral Mass was celebrated at St. Anthony's Church, Cohasset. The Rev. John R. Mulvehill officiated. Interment was in Woodside Cemetery.

Arrangements were by the McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home, Cohasset.

Memorial contributions may be made to the Catherine Mulcahy Scholarship Fund, c/o Pilgrim Cooperative Bank, 48 South Main St., Cohasset, 02025.

Esther M. Goodwin

Esther M. (Keith) Goodwin, 86, died Sept. 29, 2000 in Life Care Center, Scituate.

She was born in Boston, attending area schools. Mrs. Goodwin worked in the catering and restaurant business. A Hull resident for 45 years, she owned Esther's Restaurant and Essie's Pizza both in Cohasset Village. Her primary business was catering, operating from her home for 30 years. Mrs. Goodwin was a member of the Fraternal Order of Weymouth Eagles.

Widow of the late Elwin L. Goodwin and Warren C. Farwell, she leaves her son and daughter-in-law, Richard W. Farwell and his wife, Geraldine (McLaughlin) of Marshfield, formerly of Cohasset and four grandchildren. Mrs. Goodwin was the sister of the late Alice Weston (her twin), June Scourci and Walter Keith.

Arrangements were handled by McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home, Cohasset.

Interment was in Hull Village Cemetery, Hull.

Tedeschis part with Tara

Norwell estate on market for $3.4 M

By Cory Tromblee
CTROMBLE@CNC.COM

Tara, the renowned Norwell mansion built by Ralph and Madeline Tedeschi is on the market. If the sale of Tara goes through at the $3.4 million asking price it would be one of largest single home real estate deals on the South Shore, ever.

Along with the impressive 14-room home, comes a tennis court, golf course and 13 acres of prime South Shore Real Estate.

Contrary to popular opinion the Tedeschi's Tara does not get its name from the 1939 film "Gone With the Wind." Madeline Callahan Tedeschi, said son Terry, got the name from the Gaelic translation of the word hill. Located off River Street on Tara Drive, the mansion sits atop a hill which is the highest point in Norwell.

Crescent Realty Group — the firm listing the property — rolled out the red carpet last week, inviting area realtors, potential buyers and curious South Shore residents to explore the opulent estate.

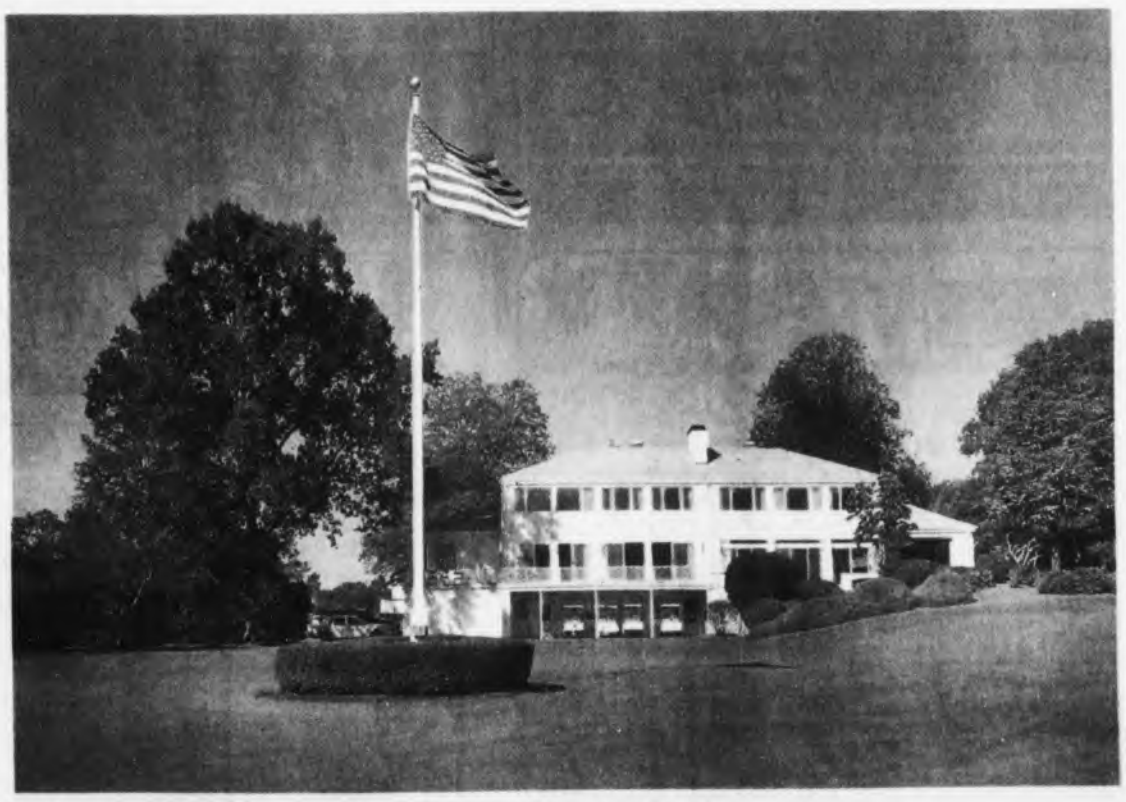
The entertainment room accommodates a billiards table nicely.

The mansion's media room offers an expansive view of the golf course.



The rear of the Tedeschi estate offers a breathtaking view of the pristine valley below.

Double chocolate cookies

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Obsessions often begin with chance encounters, a wry, fetching smile glanced out of the corner of the eye or perhaps oneís first taste of a home grown tomato. One of my greatest obsessions, however, has been the first transcendent bite of the perfect chocolate cookie, still warm out of the oven. My fantasy is that this ultimate cookie would be dense with the rich, buttery flavor of bittersweet chocolate. It would be crispy along the edges but the first bite would reveal a center of hot fudge sauce, moist, the texture of chocolate bread pudding, with a deep, complex chocolate flavor, the sort of confection that creates intense focus while it is consumed, overloading the other senses to the point of dysfunction.

My first step was to strip down a chocolate cookie recipe to its fundamentals. A chocolate cookie is a mixture of melted chocolate, sugar, eggs, butter, flour, baking soda or powder, and salt. Vanilla, coffee, and nuts are extras. There are two schools of thought: one calls for creaming the butter and sugar and the other suggests beating the eggs until they are thick and lemon colored, the butter simply melted along with the chocolate. When tested head to head, the creaming method won hands down since the cookies had more body and seemed a bit moister as well.

The next issue was one of proportions, that is, the ratio of flour to butter to eggs to chocolate. This was going to be crucial to the thickness of the cookie, the amount of moisture, the texture, and the degree to which the taste of chocolate dominated. After many tests designed to balance sweetness and moisture, I settled on one cup of sugar to 3/4 cup of flour. The biggest issue, however, was the amount of chocolate. The cookie with the faintest chocolate flavor and relatively firm, dry texture used only two ounces of chocolate per cup of flour whereas other recipes used up to a pound of chocolate with only a 1/2 cup of flour. My tests confirmed using eight ounces of chocolate per one cup of flour. Finally, I had a cookie that had good chocolate flavor and was moist, not dry. However, it still needed better flavor and texture, so I moved on to other ingredients.

The cookie started with all white granulated sugar and then was tested with a mixture of brown sugar and granulated, which seemed to improve the flavor and added just a bit of moisture to the cookie. I also tried corn syrup, which had little effect. A small amount of vanilla extract and instant coffee powder rounded out the flavors. I thought that the choice of leavener might be important so I tested baking powder against baking soda and found that the cookies were slightly thicker with the powder.

Now the cookie was thick and very good but it needed some finishing touches to make it great. I tested unsweetened versus semisweet chocolate and found the latter to be superior due to its smooth, rich flavor. Still searching for a rich chocolate cookie with the right texture, I wondered if a bit of cocoa powder might add depth of flavor. A quarter cup of cocoa was added and the chocolate flavor was both smoother and deeper. (I also tried a batch of cookies which were made with only cocoa powder ó no chocolate óand these were disappointing with only a faint chocolate flavor.) Finally, I tested five brands of semisweet chocolate and preferred Callebaut. Ghirardelli and Scharffen Berger were also quite good.

DOUBLE CHOCOLATE COOKIES

These cookies contain both semisweet chocolate and cocoa powder, hence they are double chocolate cookies. Be absolutely sure to underbake these cookies. They should still be very soft and wet when taken out of the oven. They will set as they cool. Although 10 minutes is the proper baking time in my oven, all ovens are different so I suggest baking a couple of cookies as a test, letting them cool, and then judging the texture. Note that if you make smaller or larger cookies, this will dramatically affect baking time.

8 ounces semi-sweet chocolate, coarsely chopped
1 cup all purpose flour
1 quarter cut Dutch process cocoa
1/2 teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon baking powder
5 tablespoons unsalted butter, softened,
3/4 cup light brown sugar
1/4 cup granulated sugar
2 eggs
1 teaspoon vanilla
1 teaspoon instant expresso or coffee.

1. Melt chocolate in microwave oven at 50 percent power for three minutes, stirring after two minutes. Sift together the flour, cocoa, baking powder, and salt onto a piece of waxed paper. Heat oven to 350 degrees. 2. In a large bowl, cream the butter, with an electric mixer on high speed for four to five minutes or until very pale and fluffy. Add the sugars and beat an additional two to three minutes or until light and fluffy. Scrape down the sides of the bowl. Lightly wisk an egg with a fork and add to the creamed butter, beating 30 seconds. Repeat with second egg. Add vanilla and instant coffee and beat to incorporate for 20 seconds. Add the melted chocolate and beat another 30 seconds. Scrape down the sides of the bowl. Add the dry ingredients and beat on the lowest speed until well-mixed.

3. Using a small ice cream scoop or large soup spoon, make balls of dough about 1 3/4 inches in diameter, (the size of a golf ball). Place them on a parchment- lined cookie sheet. Bake about 10 minutes, rotating the cookie sheets halfway through cooking. The cookies should be very soft and appear undercooked when removed from oven. Do not let cookies become two browned on the bottom

Remove to a cooling rack to set and cool. Makes about 20 cookies.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 18

Be sure to start this day with an upbeat, easygoing attitude. The moon enters emotional Cancer at 5:37 a.m. Mercury actually begins retrograde travel at 9:41 a.m., 16-degrees of Scorpio. Mercury will travel in retrograde motion until November 7, bringing a time for a change of pace and priorities. Focus on inner, personal growth rather than trying to forge ahead and make dramatic changes in your external life. A polarity of Venus/Saturn urges you to face your fears and put recent losses, crises behind you.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 19

The planet Venus moves into Sagittarius at 2:18 a.m., remaining there until November 12. Open the doors to a higher level of communication with loved ones. Be more nurturing and supportive. The moon travels in the sign Cancer. Influences today are ideal for tackling jobs that need repair or renovation. Plan a quiet evening. Meditate for inner peace and vision.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 20

The last quarter phase of the moon occurs at 3:59 a.m. Next Friday, October 27, the Scorpio new moon will culminate. Today the Cancer moon becomes inactive at 8:15 a.m. until 8:42 a.m., when a Leo moon takes over. Overall, people will be outgoing, optimistic. Between 8:42-11:34 a.m. you can make gains developing projects that need moral or financial support from others. A lunar opposition to dreamy Neptune at 3:11 p.m. urges you to pay extra attention to details in order to avoid making careless errors. The afternoon and evening rate high for fun and games. Kick back and go for the good times.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 21

A Leo moon continues to generate an upbeat mood today. Avoid rigid time schedules; go with the flow. An applying alignment of Venus and Neptune highlights creative pursuits. Tackle old, abandoned projects; you will see them in a new light, find new energy and enthusiasm to finish them. Romance is in the air this evening. All social activities get the green light.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 22

This day has its challenges. A positive attitude is your ace in the hole. You may experience delays, obstacles, reversals. Allow extra time and go with the flow. The Leo moon forms a challenging 90-degree alignment to Saturn at 11:12 a.m., when it becomes inactive. A Virgo moon takes over at 11:52 a.m. If you have work projects to accomplish, you can get them out of the way this afternoon. Plan to catch up on reading, studying, correspondence. The sun enters Scorpio at 10:48 p.m., remaining there until November 21.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 23

Start this day with a peaceful, positive attitude. A lunar alignment to Pluto may spark emotional thunderstorms. Choose your words carefully. The moon travels in Virgo all day. Because the sign Virgo is ruled by the planet Mercury, there may be incidents of mechanical/electrical breakdown. Projects can take unexpected turns. Avoid rigid time schedules. You can be productive if you focus on jobs that redoing, repair, follow through.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 24

Roll up your sleeves and plan to get a lot accomplished today. Focus on jobs you've been putting off and get them out of the way. Clean out desk drawers and closets. Get back on track with diets, exercise and physical fitness programs. The moon continues to travel in meticulous Virgo, active until 2:34 p.m., when it aligns with Saturn. At 3:30 p.m. the moon enters Libra. Lunar alignments to Neptune and Venus set the stage for romance. Plan a quiet evening with the love in your life.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 25

Take advantage of calm influences in a stormy astrological period. Today's planetary patterns urge you to take extra time out for yourself. Enjoy a leisurely lunch with a friend or colleague; get back in the swing of favorite sports, hobbies. The Libra moon forms harmonious contacts to Jupiter, Pluto and Uranus until it becomes inactive at 9:03 p.m. All sales and promotion campaigns get the green light. Overall, people will be friendly and cooperative.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 26

Lots of planetary activity makes for a topsy-turvy day. The dark side of a new moon is in full force and effect. Stay upbeat and don't allow anything or anyone to throw you off course. Avoid making important decisions, signing contracts or starting new activities. This is a time for finishing projects already begun, cleaning out, letting go. The planet Uranus turns direct at 11:23 a.m., 17-degrees of Aquarius. Expect the unexpected. A 90-degree alignment of the sun and Neptune can blur the lines between fact and fiction. The Libra moon is inactive until 8:23 p.m., when it enters Scorpio. Meditate for inner peace.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 27

At 3:58 a.m., the sun and moon come together at 4-degrees of Scorpio. Generally the light side of a new moon brings a favorable time for launching important ventures. Because Mercury travels in retrograde motion at this time, it is best to postpone signing contracts or starting important projects. On the other hand, influences are prime for new beginnings on an inner, spiritual level. Open your heart to higher visions. Focus on programs or disciplines that will help you to break bad habits and make significant improvements in your personal life. The planet Venus plays an important role in current planetary trends. Today Venus opposes Jupiter; tomorrow Venus aligns with Pluto.

The spirit of the season

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

Barrett's Haunted Mansion in Abington offers visitors frightful experience every October.

Halloween is practically here.

And the South Shore offers several ways to celebrate the season of the witch, goblin and ghoul. For the second year in a row Spooky World a "haunted house theme park" is open in Foxborough not far from where the New England Patriots are having a scary season all their own (Go Pats!). For a decade Spooky World has been scaring the pants off thousands of visitors.

"The place consists of four highly detailed haunted houses and two museums," said Spooky World Promotion Director Robin Zagwyn added. She said one of the museums features all kinds of old antique horror-film costumes, and the other one showcases wax figures like Dracula, and (gulp) Charles Manson.

Zagwyn said in addition to featuring live-action haunted houses and extensive museums, the park also offers a "haunted hayride" and a number of celebrity appearances. Members of the World Wrestling Federation will be on hand all month long, along with "Incredible Hulk" star Lou Ferigno.

"We are the biggest haunted theme park in the country," Zagwyn said.

Spooky World is open through Halloween on Fridays, Saturdays and Sundays from 6-11 p.m.. The cost is $23.50 per person.

Barrett's Haunted Mansion located on Bedford Street in Abington is another scary attraction for the season.

Like Spooky World, Barrett's has been around for 10 years. It consists of a two-story house filled with witches, ghouls, men with axes, moving floors, and mazes.

Visitors will find something new each season they come to Barrett's Haunted Mansion.

"It changes every year," said Barrett's spokesperson Jen Boucher. "But we always use all live people to make it more real."

Barrett's Haunted House is open every day of the week through Halloween from 7-10:30 p.m. and admission is $10.

In Quincy, horror floats aboard the U.S. Naval Destroyer the U.S.S. Salem. Docked at the Fore River Shipyard in Quincy, the Salem is a ship museum that goes ghoulish during the last week of October to herald Halloween.

"We decorate the second deck of the ship," said Joni Malloch, one of the coordinators of the attraction. "We have people walk through there and it's pretty scary. I don't go down there."

Malloch said horror buffs will definitely get what they want—from people popping out of coffins or being sawed in half.

"We really go all out," Malloch said, noting the U.S.S. Salem has hosted the event for the past four years. "A lot of people will find it different simply because the haunted house is actually on a ship."

The U.S.S. Salem is open from Oct. 21-Oct.31.Hours are 6-9 p.m. Monday through Friday. On Saturdays and Sundays, the ship will be open from 12-9 p.m. There will be a children's day on Oct. 29. Admission is $6 for adults, $4 for senior citizens, and $4 for children 4-12 years old.

If a road trip doesn't frighten you, Fall River's Factory of Terror surely will. More than just a haunted house, the Factory promises a maze-like network of 30 rooms, each one more horrifying than the next. One is even a tribute to Alfred Hitchcock's famous film "The Birds."

The Factory of Terror is open until Oct. 31 and its hours are 6-10 p.m. on Wednesdays, Thursdays and Sundays and from 6-11 p.m. on Fridays and Saturdays. It is closed Mondays and Tuesdays. Admission is $13 on weekdays and $15 on Fridays and Saturdays.

For more information on Spooky World call (978) 838-0200 or log onto the website at www.spooky-world.com. For more information on Barrett's call (781) 871-4573 or check out the website at www.bhmansion.com. To get more information on the U.S.S. Salem attraction call (617) 479-7900 or hit their website at www.uss-salem.org. And for more on the Factory of Terror call (508) 324-4077 or access the website at www.factory-ofterror.com.

Now located in Foxboro, the horror theme park Spooky World features some ghoulish celebrity appearances.

Great music, dining make for a "Grand Night"

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

Lauren W. Dooley is winning on Ado Annie's humorous "Oklahoma!" lament, "I Can't Say No." Dooley also proves herself an adept balladeer with her stunning treatment of "If I Loved You" from "Carousel."

Few theater composers wrote songs so specifically character and show-oriented as Richard Rodgers and Oscar Hammerstein II. Indeed, their first collaboration on 1943s "Oklahoma!" all but revolutionized the American musical theater, because it used musical numbers to advance the story and explain character motivation.

J. M. Productions current dinner theater offering at Raffael's in North Quincy, "A Grand Night for Singing," proves that the pair's magnificent songs can more than stand on their own. Directed by John F. McDonald, Jr., with musical direction by Rob Goldman, "A Grand Night for Singing" provides a fresh look at familiar songs from the classic musicals like "Oklahoma!," "Carousel," "South Pacific," "The King and I," and "The Sound of Music." It also includes music from lesser-known shows like "Allegro," "Me and Juliet," and "Pipe Dreams," as well as the pair's memorable television outing, "Cinderella."

A five member cast leads the musical journey, with just a few bumps along the way, beginning with a smooth medley of "Carousel Waltz," "So Far," and "A Grand Night for Singing." David Costa follows with an exuberant "Surrey With The Fringe on Top." Costa also delivers a perfectly modulated, trouble-free "Maria" from the "The Sound Of Music." It is shame then that Costa doesn't have the confidence to let his beautiful voice carry the songs. He instead opts for nonstop mugging and gesturing that seems better suited to a silent movie than the musical stage.

Lauren W. Dooley is winning on Ado Annie's humorous "Oklahoma!" lament, "I Can't Say No." Dooley also proves herself an adept balladeer with her stunning treatment of "If I Loved You" from "Carousel."

Originally presented on Broadway in 1994 where it was nominated for a Tony Award as Best Musical, "A Grand Night for Singing" was conceived by Walter Bobbie with musical arrangements by Fred Wells and orchestrations by Michael Gibson and Jonathan Tunick.

The intimate nature of Raffael's space calls for some inventive choreography which is very capably provided by cast member Allison Couture. On-stage, Couture pairs with Costa for a lovely "That's The Way It Happens," from the little-known "Me and Juliet." Couture is a delight, too, on "The Gentleman is a Dope" and "I'm In Love With A Wonderful Guy."

Caitlin G. McKay, seen in J.M.'s season opener "Jerry's Girls," has a fine operatic soprano that is pretty on ballads like "It Might As Well Be Spring" and "Something Wonderful." Her voice is an uneasy fit elsewhere, however, especially on the sensational jazz treatment of "Kansas City."

Ramone Robinson, in only his second appearance in a musical, clearly has the luck of the draw. Robinson has a weak voice and a tendency to mumble that fails to do justice to the otherwise beautiful "We Kiss In A Shadow" and the classic "Oh What A Beautiful Morning."

The great music of Rodgers and Hammerstein, the fine dining of Raffael's and a dazzling view of the Quincy skyline, combine to make J.M.'s latest production truly a "Grand Night."

("A Grand Night for Singing" will be performed at Raffael's, 1 Enterprise Drive, North Quincy, through October 26. For tickets and information, call 617/786-SHOW.)

SOUTH SHORE REAL ESTATE

IN BRIEF

O'Neil recognized for performance by Conway Financial Services

Rosemary O'Neil

Rosemary O'Neil recently was honored by Conway Financial Services for her role in the mortgage company's increase in sales volume through the third quarter of the year.

O'Neil was honored at a company wide sales meeting by President Carol Bulman, who praised CFS staff for exceeding year-to-date goals. Bulman said the volume of loans — as well as the level of cooperation between the mortgage company and Jack Conway & Co.'s real estate agents — increased by double-digit percentages through September when compared with the first nine months of 1999.

"Rosemary hit the ground running when she joined the company in May, and she has played a great role in our success," Bulman said. "Our CFS team is stronger than ever, and we're looking forward to finishing the year ahead of our expectations."

O'Neil, who is vice president of production for CFS, has more than 16 years' experience in banking and lending. She previously was vice president of operations and compliance at Nation One Mortgage Company in Braintree and vice president of retail lending for First Trade Union Bank in Boston.

She is a graduate of Salve Regina University and lives in Hanover with her husband, Paul, and children Katelyn and Justin. O'Neil said she joined CFS because the company is a family-run organization with a reputation for integrity in the industry.

Norwell-based Conway Financial Services, a mortgage brokerage firm owned by Jack Conway & Co., maintains correspondent lending relationships with some of nation's top mortgage lenders and originates a full line of mortgage products.

Jack Conway & Co. is the largest privately owned real estate firm in Massachusetts, with more than 600 associates in 37 offices from Boston to Cape Cod. The company recently was named the 77th largest realty organization in the United States by REALTOR® Magazine, the official publication of the National Association of Realtors.

Salamone wins listing contest

Bob Salamone

Michael Richardson, president Crescent Realty Group, announced the winner of the most recent listing contest, Bob Salamone.

In presenting the award to Salamone, Richardson commented on Salamone's strong work ethic and his exemplary human relation skills. "Bob combines hard work, extraordinary skill and true caring for his clients — a winning combination," remarked Richardson.

Salamone, a former owner of Preferred Properties of Norwell, is Crescent Realty Group's director of education as well as one of the company's top salesmen. In accepting his award, Salamone thanked the company's management for their commitment to customer service and support. "This company allows us to do whatever it takes to serve our clients effectively," he said. "In real estate today, that is the exception not the rule," Salamone concluded.

Salamone resides in Norwell with wife Julie. They are parents of two adults sons, David and Paul.

Crescent Realty is a full-service real estate company serving the entire South Shore.

South Shore and Plymouth County realty boards to merge

In independent votes at special meetings of Realtor members Oct. 11, the South Shore Association of Realtors Inc. and the Plymouth County Board of Realtors Inc. voted to merge effective Jan. 1, 2001.

The announcement by Presidents Donna T. Wood (PCBR) and Joyce Baker (SSAR) indicated the merger will likely place that Realtor organization as the second largest in Massachusetts, with membership of 1,500 and jurisdiction from Quincy to the Cape Cod Canal.

"Our boards, members, affiliates, employees, customers, clients and the public we serve will benefit from the merger of these two fine organizations," stated President Wood (PCBR).

President Joyce Baker (SSAR) commented "the organizations have always had common goals, and will better serve their members by providing additional services, while applying concentrated networking opportunities to affiliates."

The merged board will concentrate efforts on member services, education, technology and the protection of private property rights.

Following the meeting Wood and Baker planned to establish a transition team to complete implementation of the merger. Headquarters for the Realtor organization will be in Pembroke, while maintaining a presence in Braintree.

Members of the Merger Committee: Joyce Baker, David Drinkwater, George Raymond, Donna Wood, Elizabeth Rowe, Rich Lannin, Betsy Hines.

Bulbs—the miracles of spring

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

A journey to our local nurseries during the fall season is an absolute necessity for all passionate gardeners, assuming that there is any money left in the plantaholic budget to take advantage of the marvelous fall sales. Perennials, trees and shrubs, even recent arrivals, are usually available at bargain prices. Gourds, pumpkins, cornstalks, scarecrows and a wide array of similar decorations are irresistibly displayed to adorn our entryways and announce the arrival of the harvest season.

Green thumbs up

Autumn is the planting season and while many types of plants can be planted throughout the growing season, our hardy, spring-flowering bulbs should be purchased and planted in the weeks to come. No garden seems complete without a few patches of crocuses, daffodils or tulips. During the winter months, gardeners dream of the gardens in bloom, eagerly anticipating those first evidences of spring and by March, we cannot resist the temptation to search the melting snow or poke through the fallen leaves looking for signs of snowdrops or crocuses pushing their noses through the frosty soil. Plant now to reap those early springtime rewards.

As the number and size of my gardens expand each year, there is always space to tuck in a few more bulbs. In the past, I was inclined to plant these harbingers of spring toward the front of the border as many are of short stature, but in recent years, I have found that I prefer to move them toward the middle of each bed. These early bloomers sprout, flower and begin to decline before many other perennials have barely emerged and as the bulb foliage begins to yellow and fade, the leaves of the expanding perennials conceal the unsightly, yet critical, ripening leaves of the bulbs. Daylilies are especially good companions for bulbs as their slender, arching foliage gracefully shrouds the curing bulbs and fills the voids left once the bulbs go completely dormant later in the season.

The majority of spring-flowering bulbs are best planted in clumps or drifts rather than isolated or in single rows like marching soldiers. For an especially dramatic effect, plant large groupings of a singular variety or clusters of bulbs which bloom at the same time. If a succession of bloom is preferred, select early, mid-season and late varieties of tulips or daffodils interspersed with various types of minor bulbs which provide blooms over a long season. Interplant the bulbs with pansies, primroses and forget-me-nots next spring to create a cheerful, colorful spring display. Once the danger of frost is past next May, annual transplants can be positioned among the fading bulb foliage, eventually filling what will become vacant spaces and preventing accidental digging of the bulbs next fall.

Plant most spring-flowering bulbs at a depth three times their diameter at the widest point. The majority of commonly grown spring-flowering bulbs are true bulbs including onions (Alliums), glory-of-the-snow (Chionodoxa), checkered lily and crown imperial (Fritillaria), snow drops (Galanthus), hyacinths, grape hyacinths (Muscari), daffodils (Narcissus), squill (Scilla), lilies (Lilium) and tulips. I find the best method for planting is to use a shovel to dig one large hole for each grouping, loosening the soil in the bottom of the hole, and spacing the bulbs within that hole. Bulb planters can be extremely difficult to use in hard, heavy or rocky soils or where tree roots infiltrate the border and tend to be useful only when a garden contains soft, recently prepared soil. Set true bulbs in the planting hole on their flattened end, known as the basal plate, with the tip of the bulb up. Be sure to firm the soil and water well immediately after planting all bulbs.

Crocuses are corms and should also be planted on their flattened end with the rounded portion of the bulb on top. Greek anemones (Anemone blanda), which produce charming, daisy-like flowers in pink, blue or white set off by deep green divided foliage, and winter aconites (Eranthis) whose very early, honey-scented yellow flowers resemble buttercups, are classified as tubers. These oddly shaped bulbs are best soaked for 24 hours prior to planting. Like potatoes, roots and stems emerge from eyes scattered all over the surface so the bulbs have no top or bottom.

If rodents have plagued your bulb plantings in the past, try interplanting their favored tulips and crocuses with narcissus which are poisonous to the little beasties. Alliums and Fritillaria may also prove useful companions as they produce strong odors which may deter unwanted intruders. As a last resort, plant bulbs in cages of wire or hardware cloth or protect each planting with a strip of wire which can be bent into the ground over the bulbs and covered with soil. The bulbs can still grow through the spaces in the wire and the hidden metal will often deter the digging of chipmunks and squirrels.

For two years the Tedeschi family has been trying to decide what to do with the property built in 1963 by the late supermarket founder. Their decision was to sell the home and the 13 acres on which it sits and to develop the nearly 40 surrounding acres into house lots.

According to Terry Tedeschi, the plan is to maintain the beauty and grandeur of the home while also making appropriate use of the surrounding land. Tedsechi said the development of the land could include anywhere from 17-19 new homes that will form a horseshoe around Tara.

"Our intent is to develop the surrounding lots tastefully," said Tedeschi, "That's the concept we've been working on. We decided we wanted to be directly involved with the situation."

Tedeschi said the decision to sell and develop the surrounding land was a long and hard decision to make, but with nine brothers and sisters who are all situated comfortably in different parts of the South Shore, it seemed like the best move for the family as a whole.

"It is an emotional decision for us since we grew up there with great memories, but we're hoping that maybe another large growing family can move in and keep the house in similar shape and enjoy it in years to come."

With a grand total of 7,446 square feet of living space, the home features 14 rooms, eight of which are bathrooms. Other rooms in the house include a billiard parlor, a media room and a separate entertainment room.

With most of the furniture gone from the house, the large rooms appear even more expansive and nearly everyone offers a breathtaking view of the surrounding grounds.

Crescent brokers Michael Coletta and Michael Richardson handling the sale are focusing their attention on the home and its parcel. The Tedeschis will handle the surrounding development, which is still only in its beginning stages.

Friday's open house attracted hundreds of realtors, developers and others who came out simply to satisfy their curiosity. Most who visited the Norwell mansion seemed to agree that the price tag is not an unrealistic one.

"I think these are million dollar views for sure.... Some CEO or dot-com guy is going to come in here and buy this," said Coldwell Banker/Hunneman broker Bob Nash. "You just can't find this view anywhere else. It's better than an ocean view if you ask me."

If there is anyone out there looking to make a 1960s movie about the regal side of the golf world., the Tara home would be as good a place as any to film it. Sitting on top of a ridge overlooking the North River Valley, it has some incredible views. From any of the rooms located on the back side of the home, you can look out over the 3-green/9-tee golf course all the way into Marshfield. The wooded area that spills into the valley below the house creates a natural landscape buffer. The only man-made thing you can see beyond the golf course is a small group of homes off in the distance in Marshfield Hills.

While some of the realtors saw Tara best used as a residence again, there were others who had different ideas. Claire Gerrity and Helen Brandon, realtors with Coldwell Banker/Hunneman talk about using Tara as a health spa.. A place for top executives and other people with the means to come out for a weekend and completely escape the pressures of everyday life.

Many of the visitors talked about redeveloping the surrounding land as 18-hole golf course, and using Tara as the clubhouse.

Aside from its beauty, another major selling point for the property is its rich history. Ralph Tedeschi bought the land back in the sixties and transformed it from a chicken farm/ orchard, into one of the South Shore's most talked about properties.

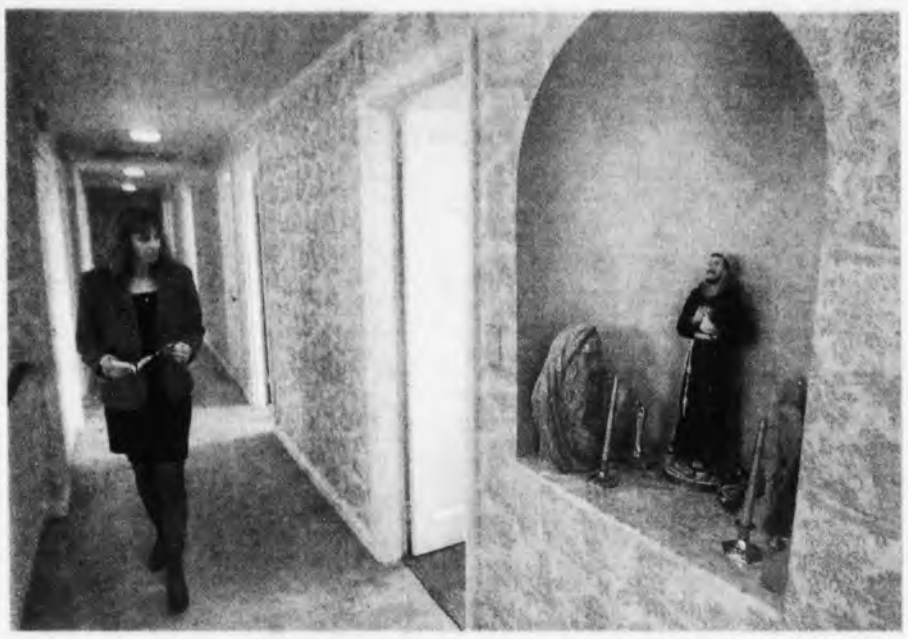
Over the years, the home has been host to hundreds of parties and functions, many of which will certainly go down in Norwell history.

Two of the most notable gatherings held at Tara were the Bicentennial Ball in 1976, celebrating the country's 200th anniversary, and the Centennial Ball in 1988, celebrating Norwell's 100th. More than 1,000 people attended each event. Tedeschi said he remembers at the Centennial Ball, many of the guests came dressed as farmers and colonists.

"The parties were something that we just all grew up with. He [my father] loved people, and he liked throwing a good party. And he had the perfect house for it," said Tedeschi.

Ralph Tedeschi, who died two years ago, was a devout Catholic, and a close friend of Cardinal Cushing. Tedeschi opened his home to host numerous church functions. Religious items including photos and shrines still adorn the mansion.

Tara's golf course has three greens and nine holes



STAFF PHOTOS/ALAN CHAPMAN

Realtor Christine Stonis tours the upstairs rooms at Tara. A small shrine here and other religious items in the mansion is evidence of the late Ralph Tedeschi's close ties to the Catholic Church.

Frequent-flyer miles

Ask George

By George Hobica
COPLEY NEWS SERVICE

Q. My wife and I have 40,000 miles in TWA's frequent-flyer program. How can we transfer this to one of our sons? We will not be using these miles.

A. Frequent-flyer miles are easily transferable to another person, although the rules vary slightly from airline to airline. Most airlines, including TWA, require that the frequent-flyer member go in person to a ticketing location (airport or city ticket office) to transact such transfers. They can usually be made to any person, not just a close relative.

Q. Although I am a Delta frequent-flyer I've never been able to be seated in the bulkhead seats when I fly, even when I make reservations three months ahead. I am always told that these seats are assigned at check-in only, but even if I arrive three hours ahead of flight time, they're already taken.

I thought that they were always reserved for disabled passengers, but this is not true from my observations. Is there anything I can do to improve my chances of getting one of these seats?

A. Like some other airlines, Delta will pre-assign choice seats to its very frequent flyers, the ones who earn "elite" status by flying 50,000 miles or more a year. Just being a member of their frequent-flyer program isn't good enough. Bulkhead seats are also often reserved, if not for the truly disabled, at least for the elderly or those who are mobility challenged.

I'm not sure why you'd want to sit in bulkhead seats anyway; the best seats in coach are the ones at the emergency exit rows over the wing, since they have more legroom. Since bulkhead seats don't have a seat in front of them, there's no place to stow your carry-on items where they're within easy reach, and I find that they don't have much legroom. The only advantage is that they're nearer the front of the plane.

Q. My father suffers from emphysema but wants to travel by air to visit a relative. He would require wheelchair assistance at both ends and oxygen during the flight. Will airlines accept him as a passenger? Would they require that he be accompanied?

A. The airline will certainly provide wheelchairs at both ends from the terminal to the plane. He doesn't need to be accompanied. However, he will have to purchase oxygen from the airline directly (you can't bring your own supply on board). For prices, contact the airline you'll be using.

George Hobica

Q. I bought two tickets for $407 each from Cheap Tickets on Air Canada but couldn't use them due to a medical problem. We're trying to get a refund or at least to use them on a future flight, but they say no. Can you help us?

A. Unfortunately not, and I'm afraid you're out over $800. Here's Cheap Tickets' reply: "We have completed a review of our records concerning your request for a full refund on the unused Air Canada tickets that you purchased. Our research indicates that the tickets in question are nonrefundable and nonchangeable. Restrictions such as these allow Cheap Tickets to offer special, low-priced, sale fares, in addition to its traditional lineup of discounted airfares. Unfortunately, there are no exceptions to this policy for medical emergencies."

As I've said before, if you buy a heavily discounted ticket from Cheap Tickets or any consolidator, you cannot change them or get a refund on them. Either buy travel insurance, or take your chances.

Have a travel question? George can be reached via e-mail at georgehobica(at)aol.com, or by writing to this newspaper.

Bradley's campaign war chest targeted

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Republican Mary Anne McKenna and independent Walter Murray attacked Democrat Garrett Bradley's fundraising efforts over the past three years in last week's debate that also featured sharp exchanges on taxes, transportation, and the definition of real leadership.

The three are seeking to replace Republican Mary Jeanette Murray, who is retiring as state representative serving the Third Plymouth District consisting of Hingham, Cohasset and Hull.

"He has allowed outsiders to reach into the district and grab it by the scruff of the neck," said Murray about Bradley's contributions from people outside of the district.

McKenna also criticized Bradley's spending a total of nearly $200,000 in the 1998 and 2000 elections for state representative, saying she pledged to stay within the spending limits outlined in the state's Clean Election Law.

"The average campaign raises between $30,000 and $35,000, and that's how much I expect to raise," she said adding campaigns should not be bought.

But Bradley defended his fundraising and the support from special interests that Murray accused him of. He said the donations from special interests such as lawyers, real estate brokers, insurance agents and hotel developers, are for the most part family friends. "The (real estate broker) sold my parents their first house in Hingham, and sold me my house too...the hotel developers used to work with my father," he countered. "People who know me know I go to my family and friends first. Sadly they don't live in the district. But I've raised two times as much money in the district than both of my opponents."

He also said he has essentially been involved in four races — the 1998 and 2000 primaries, plus the general elections — and his spending broke down to about $50,000 per campaign.

The debate, held in Hingham Town Hall's Sandborn Auditorium and sponsored by Community Newspaper Company, drew about 65 people, with many others partic-

Youth at risk

Parent forum to address teen behavior

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

It's nothing new.

Cohasset teens are experimenting with illegal drugs, alcohol, tobacco and other potentially harmful substances.

Some are also sexually active and some have unsafe dietary behaviors such as taking diet pills without a doctor's advice.

School health education coordinator Michael Gill gets a picture of what local teenagers are doing by conducting a "Youth Risk Behavior Survey" every two years that puts Cohasset in context with the state and nation.

The results of the survey will provide the focus for a parents' forum led by the Rev. Cliff Cutler

Town Meeting OKs museum

Voters breeze through warrant

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Monday's special Town Meeting will not be known as the most controversial one of all time, nor the longest.

Before a subdued audience of more than 200, town officials were able to breeze through the 29 article warrant in just over 90 minutes, adopting each recommended motion with comfortable margins. The longest debate didn't involve the normally hot topics such as school funding, Greenbush, the Hagerty property or the Woodside Cemetery, but instead whether the town should authorize the purchase of a new ambulance (see related story).

Town Meeting also easily gave the two-thirds margin needed to lease out the 1929 wing of the former Osgood School as a "Children's Discovery Museum."

Highlights of the meeting included a final go-ahead for the renovation of the Hagerty property, approval for the final environmental and landscape engineering study to be done for Woodside Cemetery expansion, and the establishment of a $15,000 contingency fund for legal, engineering and advisory costs from negotiations with the MBTA about the Greenbush right-of-way.

Town Meeting also easily gave the two-thirds margin needed to lease out the 1929 wing of the former Osgood School as a 'Children's Discovery Museum.' After an initial question of the building's safety by Jerusalem Road resident Leonora Jenkins, Mary Larson, who serves on the Town hopes for calm Halloween

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Town officials hope the only ghouls and goblins seen this Halloween are the ones trick-or-treating with their parents, and not of the teenage variety. Last year, Halloween featured many more tricks than treats as Cohasset youths took it upon themselves to make sure some town residents had a scary night.

"Kids just got way out of control, and it wasn't, unfortunately, the first time."
— Jane Pesatore, PSO president

According to police reports, nearly 100 teens wreaked havoc around town. Village storefronts were vandalized. Windows were broken at the new Osgood School and the playground at the former Osgood School was spray-painted with obscene graffiti. Cop cars were egged and dented. The teens also stole candy from young trick-or-treaters. This was the second time in four years teenagers had run wild on Halloween night. In 1996 Cohasset police officers and cruisers were egged repeatedly, resulting in hundreds of dollars of damaged equipment.

Police Chief Brian Noonan said he isn't expecting a repeat performance, but nonetheless has ordered extra patrols to be on duty Tuesday night.

"I expect a very nice, peaceful Halloween," he said. "I have put extra personnel on. I don't want to get into the logistics of it, but I have put additional [personnel] on, just to make sure everything's in control."

Cancer survivor's therapy builds strength, support

Editor's note: This is the last in a four-week series on breast cancer as part of National Breast Cancer Awareness Month in October.

Penny Johnson is a breast cancer survivor. And she takes nothing for granted.

"I would never say I'm cured. I think the cancer is just being held at bay," said the 42-year-old Weymouth resident who was first diagnosed with cancer at 34. "I still go to the doctor every six months for my own peace of mind."

National Breast Cancer Awareness Month

She maintains her cautious and practical approach, even though she's been cancer free since 1997. Johnson's also tried to make something positive come from her difficult ordeal— that has taken shape with the innovative aquatic physical therapy program she helped build at South Shore Hospital in Weymouth.

"I was the first member of the program," she said, adding the program, called "Bosom Buddies," began about two years ago. "I happened to see the program advertised in the paper when the hospital was first trying to get it going. At that time, I had no strength in my arms or upper body whatsoever. I couldn't even open a jar of sauce. Needless to say, I signed up for the program."

Johnson found she was only one of two members of the program along with its instruc-

Absentee ballots

Absentee ballots for the state election on Nov. 7 are now available at the town clerk's office. Absentee voting may be done during normal office hours until noontime on Monday, Nov. 6, at which time the office will be closed to prepare for the election.

You may vote absentee for the following reasons only:

Absence from the town during the hours the polls is open; physical disability; religious beliefs, which prevent voting at the polls on Election Day.

The applicant must request an absentee ballot. Applications are available in the town clerk's office or a written, signed request can be sent by mail, or hand delivered by the voter or any other person. The application should include the legal voting address of the voter, where the ballot is to be mailed, and the signature of the applicant. A family member of a person qualified to vote by absentee ballot may apply on behalf of such voter. The applicant shall state his or her relationship to the absentee voter; sign the application under the pains and penalties of perjury and mail or hand deliver the application to the clerk's office. Absentee ballots must be mailed to the voter. Returned ballots should be mailed or can be delivered by an immediate member of the family to the town clerk's office by Nov. 7 to be counted.

The Accu-Vote optical scan system will be used. Instructions to voters are printed on the ballot and any pen or pencil may be used. To vote, completely fill in the oval to the right of your choice. Secrecy sleeves are available at the check-in tables. The ballots can be inserted into the machine face up, face down, etc. and will be read. It is the usual policy to flip the ballot over so the blank side shows as they insert it into the machine. Voters who are uncomfortable with this should use the secrecy sleeve.

If you are permanently physically disabled and cannot cast your vote at the polling place, you may file a letter from your physician with your town clerk, stating that you are permanently unable to cast your vote at the polling place because of physical disability. A completed application for an absentee ballot for you to sign and return will be mailed to you by the town clerk at least 28 days before every primary and election.

Fall cleanup

The group of teenagers and their adult advisors who travel to Appalachia each summer are hard at work making plans for their 14th annual work-project trip. There are 131 teenagers and 35 adults (they need a total of 50 adults) registered for the 2001 trip (June 23 to July 1). In February they will learn the locations of the five different counties they will be serving.

They will no longer make Thanksgiving pies and breads as one of their fund-raisers. Nor will they be making Super Bowl soup and subs in January, but will sponsor an Appalachia Festival instead.

For the new fall fund-raiser they are sponsoring a "fall clean-up" which will involve a car wash this Saturday, Oct. 28, at the Second Congregational Church from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. Work teams will also be available to do odd jobs.

Some of the odd jobs available include the following: set up, park cars, serve and clean up for a holiday party (food prep not included), rake leaves, paint a room, move furniture, or suggest something.

There are only eight teams available, so jobs will be let on a first-come-first-served basis. The minimum donation requested is $200 (higher if job warrants it). Call 383-0345, fax to 383-7005 or e-mail to cohassetasp@dreamcom.net to request a team.

Senior flu clinics, Oct. 26 & Nov. 7

The Cohasset Board of Health and the Social Service League will hold a senior flu clinic (for those 65 years and older only) Thursday, Oct. 26, from 10 a.m. to noon, at the Second Congregational Church, next to the Town Hall. Pneumonia vaccine will also be available at the clinic. Only people 65 years and older will be vaccinated at this clinic.

A second clinic will be held Tuesday, Nov. 7, from 10 a.m. to noon, at the Second Congregational Church for those people 65 years and older and people with asthma, chronic lung or heart disease, diabetes, AIDS, HIV, kidney disease, or immune problems.

General town clinics will be scheduled later in November. The guidelines will be strictly followed according to the Mass. Department of Public Health Priority Guidelines.

Options still open in Little Harbor sewer feasibility study

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

The gravel pits and land between the Osgood and Deer Hill Schools are being looked at as possible sites for a sewage treatment plant for Little Harbor-area homes, said Wayne Perry, an associate engineer with environmental engineering firm Stearns & Wheeler. Using the Wheelwright Park lawn or Town Common as leaching areas is also on the table..

The comments were made at a public hearing held by the Board of Health last week, to update the community on the ongoing study to determine the feasibility of sewering houses around Little Harbor. The final study is expected to be released in December, according to Perry.

Perry, however, did say his firm hoped Little Harbor could be connected to the upgraded Central Cohasset Sewer Treatment Plant, but until final water usage numbers of the area are in for the expanded Central Cohasset Sewer District, he doesn't know if that will be possible.

"The best solution would be to send it to Central Cohasset," he said. "But if that doesn't work out, we'll have to find another site."

Perry also said his group has not yet done a hydrology study of the Town Common or Wheelwright Park to see if the areas could hold the anticipated 100,000 gallons of water a year in the ground.

The study is being done in as part of a court order from the state regarding wastewater management in Cohasset. North Cohasset is in the process of hooking up its new sewer lines to a treatment plant in Hull. The Central Cohasset sewer project recently wrapped up work. The Little Harbor and Lily Pond areas of Cohasset were left out of the town's initial sewering plans, but were designated by the board of health as "priority" areas. Town meeting appropriated funds to extend the sewer installation project across Route 3A to Lily Pond in March, 1999.

The current study is the third study of the Little Harbor area. Prior studies were done in 1996 by Tutela Engineering, which said the area shouldn't be sewered, and in 1998 by Coler & Colantonio, in a study paid for by citizens group Citizens for Equitable Environmental Solutions (CEES).

So far, Perry said his group has talked with neighboring residents, done soil and water testing, looked at sites, evaluated different options for the town, and is currently writing a final recommendation report. During his presentation, Perry presented a number of different types of sewage treatment plants available to the project, that ranged from an open treatment pool, to a series of underground containers.

Perry said his group has discussed a number of possible sites for a treatment plant and leaching field. Options looked at include space near the Deer Hill School, the gravel pits, Wheelwright Park, and White's Farm for the plant, and the Town Common, Sandy Beach and Whitney Woods as possible sites to discharge the wastewater. A number of factors figured into the evaluation of possible sites, Perry said. "We looked at the soil depth of water in the location, if there were any sensitive receptors or abutters, what the site's current use is, its proximity to flood zones, and regulating issues and public opinion," he explained.

Perry pointed to a chart that showed just a small part of land able to accept wastewater discharge, because of the rockiness of Cohasset's ground. Stearns & Wheeler will recommend that wastewater be discharged under either the lawn by the North Main Street entrance of Wheelwright Park, or under the Town Common, if Little Harbor couldn't connect to the Central Cohasset treatment plant.

Wastewater discharge under the Town Common wouldn't pose any health risks, Perry said after the hearing. "It would be clean, wastewater affluent," he said. "All the solids and organics would be taken out."

Three groups responded to the town's Request For Proposal (RFP) to do the study, and though Stearns & Wheeler's bid of $19,134 was not the lowest — Tutela Engineering Associates, Inc. of Providence, R.I. and Wilmington, Mass. submitted a bid of $9,900 — Town Manager Mark Haddad said he chose Stearns because of its "superior technical proposal" and its experience in dealing with underground water drainage issues.

The annual town meeting in March appropriated $20,000 for the study.

Coler & Colantonio, Inc. of Hingham also submitted proposals for the study, at a cost of $600 more than Stearns & Wheeler's.

According to Chapter 30B of the Uniform Procurement Act, the lowest bid resulting from an RFP does not have to be accepted, as it does when a general request for bids is issued. With an RFP, the town must examine and evaluate a group's technical proposal before looking at its bid.

Voluntary septic plan to take effect

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

After the North and Central Cohasset sewer projects are finished — 60 percent of Cohasset will still rely on septic systems for wastewater disposal.

But the town is under a court order from the state to develop a wastewater disposal plan for the entire town to protect the environment.

To that end, the Board of Health has developed a Comprehensive On-Site Wastewater Management Plan for Cohasset homes, which use septic systems. The plan could take effect Nov. 30, if the state Department of Environmental Protection gives the go ahead.

Health board chairman Stephen Bobo said the voluntary plan could relieve a lot of headaches for homeowners and compared it to an insurance policy on a major appliance.

"It's like a maintenance plan for your furnace," he said. "You pay the town a fixed fee and then forget about it."

In other words, once a homeowner opts into the plan and pays the fee, the town is responsible for maintenance of the system. If it needs to be pumped out or a pipe needs replacing, there would be no additional cost.

The homeowner would own the infrastructure but the town would have an easement to go in a fix the system, Bobo said.

The fee schedule is not finalized but would be similar to sewer fees that are based on how much wastewater a residence or business generates.

To qualify for the plan the property owner must have a current Title 5 inspection or certificate of compliance. Title 5 is the state environmental code governing septic systems. Those who do not meet Title 5 requirements can join the plan when their systems are repaired or upgraded.

Low-interest loans could be available to homeowners upgrading their septic systems whether they join the town plan or not, Bobo said.

> "The plan provides greater environmental protection and extends the longevity of the septic system."
> — Dr. Joseph Godzik, health agent

Health agent Dr. Joseph Godzik said the plan a good deal for homeowners.

"The plan provides greater environmental protection and extends the longevity of the septic system," he said.

The health board has developed a 15-page document explaining the plan including more detail on loans, fees and payments, background, goals, function checks and more. Copies may be obtained from the health board office at Town Hall. For information, call 383-4116.

A synopsis of the program goals includes:

- Implementing a decentralized wastewater management system that provides improved environmental protection while minimizing costs to homeowners and businesses and encourages alternative and shared systems in environmentally difficult areas for existing homes;
- Implementing a systematic approach to appropriate inspection, maintenance and corrective action for on-site systems to ensure they work properly;
- Extend the useful life of on-site systems through a regular maintenance plan;
- Provide a comprehensive inspection, maintenance and upgrade service;
- Provide financial assistance plans through state and local loans to assist homeowners with repair, upgrade and replacement of on-site systems.

Oversight for capital projects

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

The buck stops with them, selectmen say.

To that end, the board may require "a clerk of the works" to oversee any major capital project in town.

The debate follows on the heels of news the Cohasset Central Sewer Project is way over budget – a revelation that sent shock ways right through the selectmen's office at town hall.

Selectmen complained it was they who were receiving flack for the overruns, despite not having any authority over the project.

"There's been a lot of criticism leveled at this board, and I want to make it clear that we didn't have any oversight [of this project]," Selectmen Chairman Thomas Callahan said. "[The sewer commissioners] made it very clear they have control over this project. It is not within the authority of this board to look over the project."

The sewer commission revealed the shortfall at the selectmen's Oct. 10 meeting. According to the commission and Tutela Engineering, the project accumulated almost $800,000 in change orders, which ate through the $1 million contingency fund set up to cover overruns. The commission also blamed the shortfall on higher than expected police detail costs, additional engineering studies and needed aesthetic improvements. Voters will debate an article authorizing the commission to spend an additional $500,000 to finish the project at the Nov. 13 special Town Meeting.

The selectmen agreed oversight was lacking in the project.

"I don't see why the engineering firm should be acting as an accounting firm," Selectman Michael Sullivan argued. "We can't expect a firm to blame themselves."

He later suggested a bylaw change that would make the town manager "clerk of works" for any capital project in town. "I don't think a lot of change orders were watched over. We need the day to day scrutiny, and volunteer boards just don't have the time," he said.

Town Manager Mark Haddad, who has been on the receiving end of many angry citizens' phone calls, said a clerk of the works would essentially be the "eyes and ears" of the town.

He said a clerk of the works keeps track of things such as what time of day a contractor arrives on site, acts as a liaison between the engineer and building committee, and reviews work change orders.

This weekend brings about the change in our clocks. Make sure to adjust your clocks and set them back one hour!

NEW ARRIVALS

We have some wonderful news to report on three new arrivals here in town. Robin (McAllister) McDonough, a graduate of CHS and her husband Patrick, became the proud parents of Kyle Patrick McDonough. Kyle made an early debut on Oct. 7, 2000 weighing in at 7 lbs., 14 oz.! The McDonoughs are living in Braintree and are loving that little guy to pieces. This is such a wonderful and exciting time for the whole family, including maternal grandparents, Don and Jaye McAllister of Cohasset and paternal grandparents, Pat and Peggy McDonough of Quincy. Congratulations to all of you, a new baby is so much fun!

We also have a new little girl in town! Caroline Armstrong Bacon made her entrance into the world on Oct. 16, 2000. Her parents, Jeff and Leslie Bacon moved to Cohasset in June of this year and have settled in and are thrilled with this exciting event in their lives. Caroline weighed 6 lbs., 5 oz. and measured 20 ins. long. Caroline's maternal grandparents, the late John Armstrong and his wife Helen, who resides in Brookfield, Mass., and paternal grandparents, Robert and Janice, who live in Woods Hole, are beside themselves with joy. We know that we will be seeing little Caroline and her parents out and about, make sure to welcome them to Cohasset and congratulate them on the addition to their family! Congratulations to you all.

We have a third birth to announce. Brian and Leila Hill of Cohasset welcomed their son, Michael Leahy on Aug. 12, 2000. Congratulations on this wonderful news and hug and enjoy your fantastic bundle of joy!

POT LUCK BANQUET

Just a reminder to all soccer families in the Cohasset Middle and High School. It is time to honor those young women who have consistently attended and participated in the practices and games during these last few months. Parents, if you have not received your invitation and assignment to this Pot Luck Banquet to be held at St. Stephen's Hall on Nov. 6 at 6:30. Dig through that soccer bag! We look forward to seeing the junior varsity and varsity players and parents at this wonderful event. Please call Kathie at 383-1237 with any questions you may have.

HALLOWEEN FUN

I received some great Halloween information about a special "Halloween Party!" Pastimes is holding a Halloween Party on Sunday, Oct. 29 from 12-4 p.m.. There will be free gifts for the kids, balloons and face painting and you can snap a great picture with "Wanda The Witch!" So bring the kids, bring your camera and come enjoy a howling good time!

COLLEGE FIELD HOCKEY

New England College in Henniker, N.H. sent some news about the field hockey team. New England College captured a huge win over its CCC rival, Gordon College with the help of Cohasset's own, Kristen Reynolds. Kristen came off the bench to knock in the first goal on an assist from a teammate. The final score was 3-0, great playing Kristen!

TRINITY SOCCER

Trinity College in Hartford, Conn. sent us some news about Morgan Sandell of Cohasset and the men's soccer team. Morgan scored the only goal in a game against Eastern Connecticut in the 22nd minute. This was a great play, Morgan. Keep on kicking!

GOYETTE SCHOLARSHIP

Finally, some news about a wonderful fundraiser being held in the memory of Robert Goyette, a Cohasset police officer in the 60's and a man who was a resident of Cohasset for a long, long time. The Goyette Family would like to invite you to the 2nd Annual Fund-Raiser dinner. The event will be held on Saturday, Nov. 4 at the Sons of Italy Hall, Rt. 3A in Hingham from 7 p.m. to midnight. Bob's favorite meal, spaghetti and meatballs will be served.(all-you-can-eat!) The cost will be $10. per person payable at the door. There will be several great raffle and auction prizes along with a special celebrity guest master of ceremonies. All who attended last year had a great time and we hope you can all make it again this year. All proceeds are donated to the Robert A. Goyette Memorial Scholarship which is awarded annually to a Cohasset High School male and female senior student. If you are unable to attend but would like to make a donation, please make checks payable to: The Robert A. Goyette Memorial Scholarship Fund and mail to: 275 Cedar St., Cohasset, MA 02025. This is a great time for a great cause!

HALLOWEEN PARADE

Don't forget that this Sunday, the Annual Halloween Parade is being held on the Town Common from 1:30-3: p.m.. Come ready for some costume fun, games and treats and make sure to bring those cameras!

SPECTACULARS

Speaking of spectaculars, you should not miss the stunning fall flower show at Veterans Park next to Kimballs by the Sea at the harbor. The memorial listing Cohasset veterans' name is a backdrop now for some 50 brilliant yellow giant "mums" and an equal number of flowering kale and other assorted plants. All this gracing the well-tended green of the lawn.

William Hannon

OUTSIDE EXAMINER

Cohasset resident William Hannon has been appointed an outside examiner for the Harrow Business School's (London) MBA in Design Management. He is the first American to hold the post.

Hannon is a professor of industrial design at the Massachusetts College of Art. Congratulations!

Please remember to prepare yourselves and the children for Halloween! For the younger group, remind them of cars, safety in numbers etc. For all of the older group, please use this time to remind them all of the issues that have come up in years past and the fact that we don't want any repeats of the bad ones. Let's all have fun and enjoy the evening!

That is all for this week. Make sure to send in all your news and photos, special day information and anything else that is happening "Around Town." You can email it in at jenpiep@yahoo.com, send it to 622 CJC Highway or call (781) 923-1057. Have a great week!

Barn sale

Bare Cove Fire Museum's annual fall barn sale is Saturday, Oct. 28, from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. at 19 Fort Hill St., rain or shine.

To donate items call 749-0028.

The Bare Cove Fire Museum has a history of supporting the cost of the non-profit museum by holding a bi-annual barn sale in the storage building in Bare Cove Park. Items for sale include books, records (78s and other sizes), tapes, speakers, dishes, furniture, toys, puzzles, clothes, computer games, car and motorcycle parts, tools, art, holiday decorations, sports equipment and household appliances.

The museum's neighbor, the South Shore Model Railroad Club is having an open house the same day.

Halloween fair

Pumpkins and cornstalks are appearing at local farm stands. Orange and black decorations are showing up in stores and plans are being conjured up for the South Shore Community Center Nursery School's annual Halloween Fair. This year's fair will take place on Cohasset Common on Oct. 29 from 1:30 to 3:30 p.m. A South Shore tradition for more than 20 years, the fair offers Halloween fun for the entire family. Spooks and cartoon characters of all shapes, sizes and ages are encouraged to begin preparing to join in the howlish fun.

For more information about the fair or the programs of the South Shore Nursery School, call Lynne Sheridan at 383-0036.

Special evening consigning hours

Manager Andi Nerrill of Scituate announced special hours for consigning 6-8 p.m. Thursday, Oct. 26 to accommodate those who work during regular hours of the Cohasset Consignment Shop which is located at Tedeschi Plaza, Route 3A.

Merrill added that regular hours for consigning are Monday through Friday 10 to 11:30 a.m. Shopper hours are Monday through Saturday 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. and Sunday noon to 4 p.m.

Merrill also noted that there is a wide selection of fall and winter suits, sweaters, slacks for men and women, as well as infant and children attire to size 10. Antique collectors will find Staffordshire, Meissen, English Bone China, as well as clocks, lamps, silver and crystal vases and stemware.

Since the shop is staffed entirely by volunteers, Merrill encouraged men and women to register for three hour shifts as it is rewarding and helps worthy programs sponsored by the social service league that serves the towns of Scituate, Hull, Norwell, Hingham and Cohasset. For information call (781) 383-0687.

Community Experience That Makes A Difference

Garrett shows House Majority Leader William Nagle the damage to our local seawall.

A Commitment to Local Issues

Garrett Bradley is committed to improving the quality of life in our community. As our State Representative, he will:

- ★ Fight against the proposed mall access road to the former Weymouth Naval Air Station
- ★ Secure funding for the restoration of the seawall in Hull
- ★ Ensure that budgeted dollars for the Nantasket Pier dredging project are appropriated
- ★ Fight against proposed new runway at Logan Airport
- ★ Fight for lower auto insurance rates
- ★ Work to reduce local water rates
- ★ Fight for better access to our neighborhood beaches while addressing environmental concerns
- ★ Fight for smaller class sizes in our schools
- ★ Provide property tax relief by utilizing a portion of recent tobacco settlement funds

"As your State Representative, I will fight for quality health care, a strong school system and lower taxes. I ask for your vote on November 7th so that we can continue to improve the quality of life in Cohasset."

Town Meeting gives go ahead to Hagerty Park, children's museum project's steering committee, said not only will the building be made safe for children, it would be a fantastic opportunity for the town. "It will meet every code. We would never dream of putting children in it if not safe," she said.

Larson said already $300,000 has been raised to renovate the wing, which is expected to cost close to $1 million to fully fix. Renovations are expected to be done in conjunction with construction of the new town library in the rest of the building. Responding to a question by Tom Gruber, Larson said the renovation will be done at no cost to the town. The motion was adopted with a supportive round of applause afterward.

Motions passed unanimously included articles on paying unpaid bills, increasing various departmental budgets, money transfers into the conservation fund and private way repair capital account, authorizing the water department to spent more than $900,000 on capital repairs, and changing the Government Island Study Committee, the Government Island Advisory Committee.

Articles 11, 18, 19 and 21 were withdrawn from consideration.

The meeting authorized more than $1 million in expenditures ranging from capital purchases to engineering studies, not counting the water department's expenditures. The money for the water department improvements is expected to be covered in-house, and not result in higher water costs.

The town was authorized to purchase a plethora of new vehicles, including a new police cruiser, ambulance, two riding lawn mowers, a one-ton dump truck and a sweet sweeper. Some were authorized just in time. Selectman Merle Brown said on the morning of the meeting, the front axle on one of the riding mowers snapped.

Leonora and Leland Jenkins tried to curtail the spending by forcing town officials to justify the purchases. Leland Jenkins was also vocal about the motion to authorize $20,000 to dig wells for Milliken and Alumni fields.

Town Manager Mark Haddad addresses Monday's special Town Meeting.

Currently, the town is purchasing water from the water department to keep the town's athletic fields, and cemetery lawns green. However, selectmen figured it would be cheaper to just drill wells at Milliken Field.

"Why can't you just negotiate cheaper price for the water?" Lee Jenkins wanted to know. "Now we will have extra equipment that will need to be maintained."

Jenkins added later that even if the wells are dug, there is no guarantee they would hit water.

Brown explained the town pays the exact same rate for water town residents do, out of fairness. He pointed out the towns of Hingham, Norwell and Hanover use wells for their athletic fields. "Besides," he added, "it doesn't make much sense to take purified water and water the grass. Ground water is just as good and would probably do a better job."

The meeting wrapped up shortly after 8:45 p.m., just an hour and a half after it commenced at 7:15 p.m.

Town Manager Mark Haddad, who was pleased with the turnout, credited the quick meeting to educated attendees. "People were well informed and knew what the issues are," he said.

Moderator George Marlette, who has been battling with finding the right pace for the meetings, was pleased with how it went. "I thought the meeting went very smoothly," he said. "We've got a good match right now. Originally the pace of the meetings were very, very slow. I think we've arrived [at the right speed]."

He was also complimentary of the atmosphere of the meeting. "There seems to be respect in the meetings for diverse opinions. This one was a little lighter than it had been in past meetings."

Marlette had come under fire in the past by asking for blanket approval of all motions where a hold was not asked for. Martha Gjesteby, began the meeting by saying she objected to that style, and would automatically place a hold on each article, in order to, in her opinion, slow it down and make sure every is heard.

Marlette said he "respectfully differed" from Gjesteby's opinion, but did respect her wish.

He went into the meeting expecting a rather tranquil meeting, but doesn't expect the same come the Nov. 13 special Town Meeting. "From what I've gathered...most town officials feel there's no major problem, but there is a need to explain why the project is costing more, where the money has gone, and there is a need for additional funds. There should be some spirited debate on the floor," he said. "We should be in for a fairly long night."

New ambulance brings debate

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

For a while, it seemed an auto mechanic was needed to come in and act as a translator.

On the floor of Town Meeting Tuesday night, questions were being asked about engine sizes, which would then lead into answers involving valves and liters. Shocks and suspensions were the hot words, as was the debate between a heavier vehicle or lighter.

Luckily in the end it didn't matter. The meeting almost unanimously approved the purchase of a new ambulance.

In a meeting dotted with motions involving Greenbush, school funding and departmental budget increases, it was the authorization to buy an ambulance that garnered the most debate.

According to Fire Chief Roger Lincoln, the town's current ambulance has been servicing the residents of Cohasset for 8 years and has traveled 103,000 miles during that time. He said when you take into account engine hours, or time the engine is left idling while making a pick-up or drop-off, the motor has run for the equivalent of 210,000 miles.

"There's been a 22 percent increase in people transported," said Lincoln. "[The ambulance has a lot of wear and tear. It's difficult to keep on the road because it keeps breaking down. The longer it's kept in service, the more repairs will cost and more down time it will incur."

The article authorized the purchase of a $110,000 ambulance that would meet the Advance Life Support system requirements the department needs to become a fully-functioning paramedic unit.

But despite Lincoln's argument, and the seeming need to make sure injured people actually do get to the hospital, the Advisory Committee voted 4-3 against the article going into the meeting. Chairman Dick Avery said the committee voted against the expenditure because it just wasn't clear whether the town's money would be better spent buying a new vehicle or repairing the current one.

"We shouldn't wait until it's on the back of a tow truck, with a patient being transferred to another ambulance."

— Fire Chief Roger Lincoln discussing the need for a new town ambulance

Jerusalem Road resident Leland Jenkins also grilled Lincoln whether the cost of repairs and amount of downtime called for spending the $110,000 needed to purchase the vehicle.

"We've already spent $20,000 to keep it on the road," Lincoln explained. "I see it nothing but getting worse."

Selectmen Chairman Thomas Callahan also supported the purchase saying the town deserved to have a "tip-top piece of equipment."

The Capital Budget Committee sided with selectmen. "In our opinion, it's a worn-out piece of equipment," committee chairman Mark Baker said.

The discussion shifted into a more technical aspect, that left some residents reaching for a consumer reports guide. "You're looking at a lighter vehicle than the one you currently use. What type of history does that have?" Selectmen Merle Brown asked, speaking as a citizen.

Fred Seigel, a Bates Lane resident, asked about the vehicle's engine size.

Lincoln, who was up and down so much his seat never got warm, responded saying an enhanced suspension system is included to make the rides smoother and vehicle last longer. The ambulance will also have a 7.3-liter diesel engine.

Lincoln's main point was that the ambulance should be replaced now, rather than after disaster happens. "We shouldn't wait until it's on the back of a tow truck, with a patient being transferred to another ambulance," he said. "We're not replacing it because of the suspension system. I just think it's only going to get worse. We're going to pour money into it until it ends up on the back of a tow truck."

A two-thirds vote was needed to approve the purchase. Despite some objections, the motion passed easily.

McKenna, Murray target Bradley's campaign war chest ipating in the interactive, on-line portion of the debate. The debate was broadcast live on WATD radio and listeners were able to log on to the CNC website at www.townonline.com/south to register questions for the candidates.

Bradley, McKenna and Murray rarely agreed on anything during the 90-minute debate. The only consensus among the three candidates was on term limits, which they oppose.

But on issues like taxes, the candidates took three varying positions.

McKenna said she is very much in favor of Question 4 on the state ballot which would lower the state income tax level to 5 percent over the next three years.

"[Former Governor] Michael Dukakis made a promise that the tax rate increase would be temporary. It is now 11 years later. It's time for us to hold the government to their promise," she said. "It's your money."

Bradley said he is against Question 4, but would support lowering the tax rate over a five-year period. He also would attach it to the unemployment rate so if unemployment went over 6 percent, the tax reduction would be put on hold. "It's important to reduce taxes, but to do it responsibly," he said.

Murray said he's against the tax cut altogether, citing the need to pay down the state debt first. He called his opponents' tax plans "gimmicky" and said he instead would support an increase in deductions for families with children.

The inevitable question about Greenbush and transportation on the South Shore was asked, with both Bradley and McKenna against restoration of the commuter train, and Murray strongly in favor.

"The Plymouth and Middleboro lines have been an overwhelming success...you can't even get a seat," Murray said. He called McKenna's and Bradley's opposition to the train "squeaky wheel politics" and called restoration a "no-brainer."

Bradley proposed an increased water shuttle service to ease traffic congestion. He said additional water shuttles like the one in Hingham, should be launched in Cohasset, Hull and Weymouth. "It's a smart plan, and we can do it for less [than the cost of Greenbush]," he countered.

While against restoration, McKenna said it is imperative to secure the proper mitigation from the state. "We need to ensure we get the best mitigation measures possible," she said adding that mitigation needs to be equal in Hingham and Cohasset.

All three candidates thought their backgrounds would be enable them to be a consensus builder in the legislature, but Bradley tried to play up his majority party affiliation. "As a freshman Democrat, I'd have a better chance of getting involved in the discussion," he said. McKenna was quick to knock the large Democratic advantage in the State House on numerous occasions throughout the debate. "There 133 Democrats and 27 Republicans [in the House]. There can be no reasonable debate on any issue,' she said, adding with that type of disadvantage, "there can't be a Democracy."

Murray said his political science and public policy degrees, as well as spending time working for liberal U.S. Senator Ted Kennedy, and a conservative Republican in the Virginia House of Delegates, shows his ability to work with people on both sides of the aisle. "I have more actual political experience than both of my opponents," he said.

The candidates also got the opportunity to question each other toward the end of the debate. Murray grilled both candidates over their opposition to the Mills Mall proposal for the former Naval Air Station in South Weymouth, which he is for. Bradley questioned McKenna on how she could be an effective legislator when she is in the minority party, and disagrees with the governor on many different issues. McKenna went after Murray, who has run for office as a Democrat and independent, on his party switching, and also questioned whether Bradley really was against the Mills Mall proposal, even though he has support from 15 special interest groups that would benefit from it.

Who is CRC?

The Cohasset Revitalization Corporation (CRC) is a private non-profit organization whose mission is to assist the Town of Cohasset implement infrastructure improvements in the village and harbor.

The CRC is in the process of establishing a nine-member board of directors, representing various community interests. The executive director of the organization is Dean Rizzo, past resident of the community, and past chairman of the Towns' Village Revitalization Task Force.

The CRC will be working in partnership with the Village Revitalization Task Force, as well as with other town officials, committees and boards; residents; local non-profit organizations and businesses.

Why was it Established?

The establishment of the CRC is designed to accelerate the revitalization effort, which began in the summer of 1996 by the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce, and subsequently strengthened by the Town of Cohasset through the appointment of the Village Revitalization Task Force in the winter of 1998.

Although the volunteer-run program had many successes, it often struggled with a lack of financial resources to undertake the necessary technical, design, and planning assistance needed to help solve the problems at hand. The CRC was created to accept private donations in order to hire professional planning and consulting agencies to assist the community in their revitalization objectives.

What Are the Goals of CRC?

The CRC has four primary objectives to help the community:

- Design and provide infrastructure and streetscape improvements in the village consisting of new sidewalks, street paving, improved parking, safer pedestrian and vehicle access & circulation, additional lighting and plantings, and improved signage.
- Design and provide infrastructure and streetscape improvements in the harbor consisting of an enhanced Captains' Walk to effectively link the public/private properties along the harbors edge; enliven the rich maritime history of the waterfront; as well as provide a clear and safe delineation between pedestrian, bicycle, and vehicle travel and access along Border Street.
- Improve the linkage between the village and harbor through better signage, and natural streetscape enhancements on connecting sidewalks and roadways.
- Develop a program to bury existing overhead utility lines in the village and harbor areas.

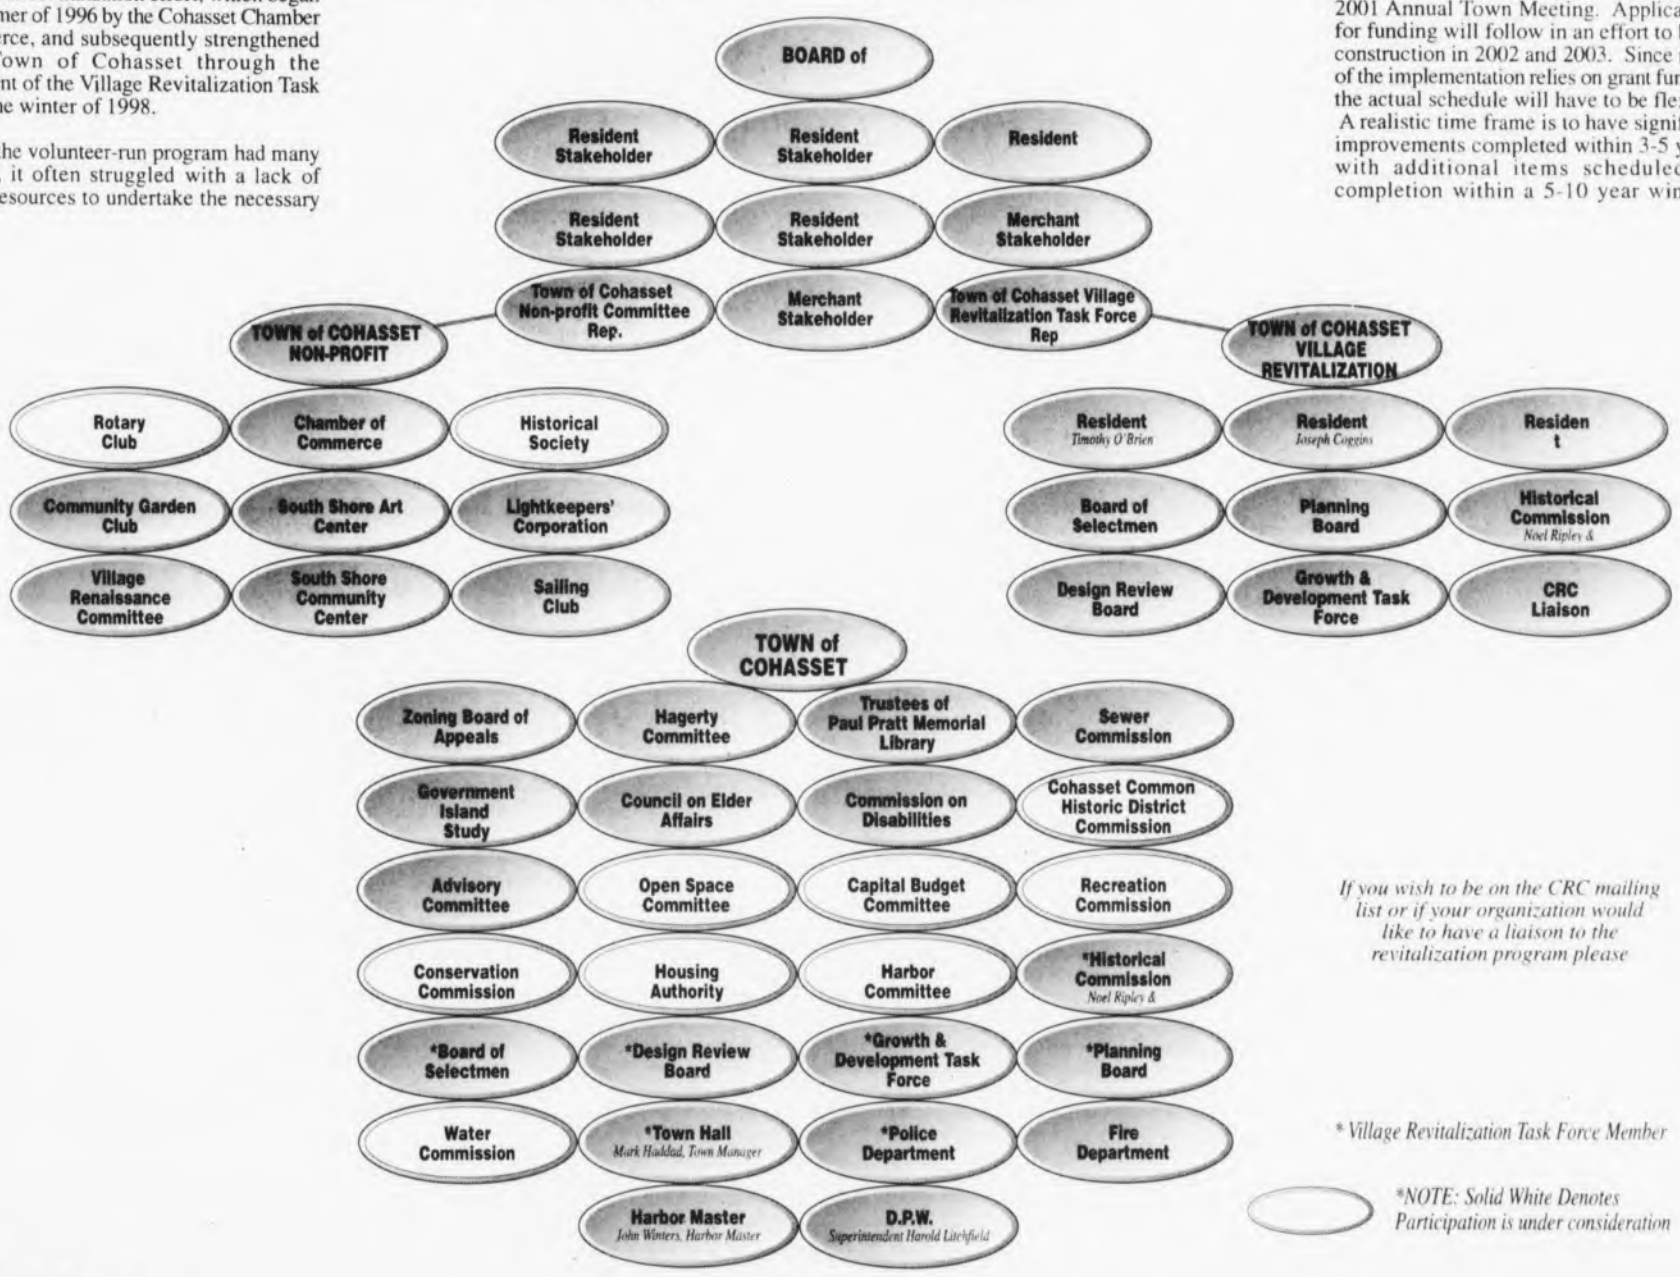
Who Will Make the Decisions?

Since the majority of the improvements will occur on Town of Cohasset property, the Board of Selectmen and Cohasset Town Meeting will have the final decision-making authority on proposals brought forward.

How Much?
Who Will Pay?
How Long Will it Take?

Though we are in the preliminary stages of knowing the exact answers to these questions, we are confident that the numbers and time frame will be in the following vicinity.

- We estimate the cost to complete the various objectives identified to be $ 7 – 7.5 million dollars.
- We anticipate the actual payment for these improvements to come from the following sources:
  - 59% from state & federal grants and funding programs
  - 23% from private investment
  - 18% from the Town of Cohasset
- We anticipate having the community consensus building process and the preliminary engineered design drawings completed for a presentation at the Spring 2001 Annual Town Meeting. Applications for funding will follow in an effort to begin construction in 2002 and 2003. Since much of the implementation relies on grant funding, the actual schedule will have to be flexible. A realistic time frame is to have significant improvements completed within 3-5 years, with additional items scheduled for completion within a 5-10 year window.



If you wish to be on the CRC mailing list or if your organization would like to have a liaison to the revitalization program please

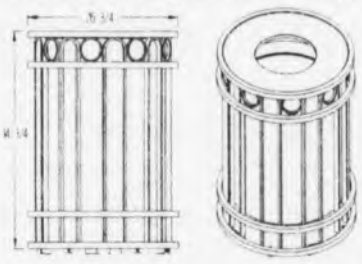
CRC News

The CRC has partnered with the Town of Cohasset and the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce in the purchase of six new trash receptacles for the Village. The goal of the new receptacles is to alleviate the problem of overflowing trash in the small receptacles that are in the village today. The cost to have the six receptacles delivered to Cohasset is $4,578. If you would like to see a color picture, or suggest where they should be located please stop by our office.



The Village Infrastructure Improvement Program is well under way. As you visit the village you may notice planners, designers, and engineers gathering information and learning the unique character of the village environment. The second in a series of workshops is scheduled for Thursday, November 9 @ 7:30 pm in the Town Hall Auditorium. The goal is to have community consensus generated plans completed by the end of January.

The CRC recently held a meeting with various state and federal agencies to review improvement ideas for an enhanced Captains' Walk along the harbors' edge. Many positive and constructive comments on various design alternatives were shared. Before undertaking a full design process however, the CRC needs to have a better understanding of what the community of Cohasset thinks about improving the infrastructure along the harbors' edge. A public workshop to hear thoughts and ideas is scheduled for Wednesday, November 1 @ 7:30 pm at the Lightkeepers' Residence.

Feel free to visit us during the following office hours or by appointment.

Monday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday
10:00 am – 4:00 pm
Tuesday: 12:00 – 8:00 pm & Saturday: 9:00 am – 1:00 pm

Harbor Walk Workshop

Wednesday, November 1st @ 7:30 pm – Lightkeepers' Residence

The Cohasset Revitalization Corporation is sponsoring a community workshop to gather input on the creation of an enhanced Captains' Walk along Cohasset Harbor. The workshop will be held on Wednesday, November 1st, 7:30 pm at the Lightkeepers' Residence on Government Island. The goal of the harbor walk proposal is to effectively link the various public and private properties along the harbors edge through the establishment of improved sidewalks and walkways. The enhancement of the existing area can help provide a safer environment for pedestrians and bicyclists; improve harbor viewing areas; enliven the rich maritime history of the waterfront through interactive markings as depicted by the existing Captains' Walk; and provide a clear delineation between pedestrian, bicycle, parking, and vehicle travel along Border Street. The purpose of this workshop is to gather input and ideas on the extent of improvements the community would like to see in the harbor area. Representatives from the Cecil Group, an urban landscape design firm, will help facilitate this workshop.

Village Workshop

Thursday, November 9th @ 7:30 pm – Cohasset Town Hall

The Cohasset Revitalization Corporation, in partnership with the Town of Cohasset Village Revitalization Task Force, is sponsoring the second in a series of community workshops to develop designs for infrastructure, circulation, and streetscape improvements in Cohasset Village. The workshop will be held on Thursday, November 9th at 7:30 pm in the Town Hall Auditorium. The Cecil Group, urban landscape design consultants, will give a presentation on various design alternatives for such things as new sidewalks, better parking, improved vehicle and pedestrian access, and associated streetscape design alternatives. Many of the ideas to be presented are derived from the public input received to date on the project.

Your Participation is Important!

The CRC and the Town of Cohasset encourage community participation throughout the revitalization program to bring needed improvements to the Village and Harbor areas of the community. We encourage you to convey your questions, ideas, or comments to the CRC and/or the Village Revitalization Task Force of the Town of Cohasset. Preliminary designs and ideas are on display at the CRC office located at 87 Elm Street (across from Kimball's).

Joining the battle

The statistics are staggering. We all know a sister, mother, grandmother, wife, aunt, friend or neighbor who has been diagnosed with breast cancer.

In Massachusetts alone this year, 4,400 women will learn the shattering news they have breast cancer. More than 1,000 of them are expected to die.

All will suffer through pain, loss and shock.

Throughout the month of October our newspaper has tried to play a small part in raising public awareness about the impact of the disease as part of National Breast Cancer Awareness month. In this series we've tried to keep people informed and educated about the dangers of breast cancer. With increased awareness, more cancers can be detected at an early stage, leading to higher survival rates.

But beyond the statistics and information we have tried to put faces on the disease — focusing on the hope, strength and fight of South Shore women who refuse to give in to breast cancer.

But beyond the statistics and information we have tried to put faces on the disease — focusing on the hope, strength and fight of South Shore women who refuse to give in to breast cancer.

We have been fortunate enough to share with you stories of women of courage who came forward so that others could learn from their experiences. We retold the remarkable story of Betsy Barlow Cunningham of Norwell whom doctors thought would never survive. Here she is 11 years later still battling her disease with an indomitable spirit and a zest for life. She allowed us into her home to recount personal details of her struggle, but more importantly to share in her fight for survival and will to live.

Through the masterful lens of photographer Chris Bernstein we saw firsthand Betsy's spirit shine through and the reason she keeps battling — the light of her life, her 14-year-old son Brandon.

We, too, were fortunate to find Cheryl Bergeron of Duxbury who opened her heart so that others could learn from her experiences. Cheryl is a shining example of someone who is living with cancer. She's been fighting the disease for five years, but faith and love of family have sustained her through some dark times.

As Cheryl's case illustrated, you never expect cancer can happen to you. But she also showed us the importance of not letting the disease take over, even when things look the least hopeful.

Breast cancer can strike even young women. Penny Johnson was only 34 when she learned she had breast cancer. During her six-year-old fight the Weymouth resident has lost both of her breasts, but not her determination and will to overcome the disease.

Today she has turned her tragedy into hope and action. She is one of the key motivators behind an innovative aquatic therapy program as part of a support group at South Shore Hospital in Weymouth.

There are so many other cases where faith, determination and will have won out over the cancer. But there are also too many where breast cancer robbed loving women of their life, and their families of a precious person.

The fight to raise awareness and needed funds for research can't stop on Oct. 31 when National Breast Cancer Awareness month ends. Like so many other cancers and diseases which claim our loved ones we have to continue focusing on education, prevention and research to find cures.

Like the women whose stories we've shared, we need to make our campaign to battle breast cancer a year-round fight.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Parental control

TO THE EDITOR:

With all the ghosts, goblins and pumpkins popping up in yards all over town, it's hard to miss the fact that Halloween is just around the corner.

This is a holiday that is anticipated by young and old alike and is one of the most fun events of the year. Let's keep it that way!

While spirits run high during this time of year, it is incumbent upon us, as parents, to insure that these high spirits don't get out of hand. Last year's unfortunate events are a reminder of just how easy it is to slip over the line from fun to out-of-control. There is no question that the teens of Cohasset were out of control last year on Halloween, and their actions have had an adverse impact on the Town ever since.

Simply put, neither the parents of teenagers nor the teens themselves can afford another Halloween such as we experienced last year. We all bear the burden of responsibility for those events. It is neither the schools' nor the police's responsibility to insure calm. It is ours, and we must step up to the plate, accept it and act to insure that the fun stays in Halloween.

On Oct. 31, it is more important than ever to know exactly where your children are and what they are doing.

Willing to listen

TO THE EDITOR:

I have to agree with the letters from Mr. Campbell (whom I do not know) that the many writers who have expressed opposition to the Cohasset Revitalization Committee (CRC) appear to be overly negative.

As a relative newcomer to town (we moved here in 1994), I have no idea whether there is some history which has motivated the mistrust expressed by some of the CRC's opponents. However, being unburdened by the sins of the past (to the extent that there are any), I can only look at the present and consider the future.

The CRC clearly acknowledges that its present plans are for discussion purposes only. Until proven otherwise, we must take the CRC at its word that it is seeking public input to arrive at a consensus of opinion of how best to revitalize our downtown village and harborfront areas. Moreover, the CRC clearly understands that whatever it might propose will require the approval of various town boards including the selectmen — and from what I know of the people who serve on those boards, none of them will be steamrollered into making a decision which is not in the best interests of the town.

There seems to be a natural suspicion that when people of means attempt to do something, then a nefarious end is the goal. The reference to an "oligarchy" by one letter-writer was, in my opinion, uncalled for (and for the record, I have met Mr. Ordelheide only on a few occasions as he has greeted guests at his restaurant, and I have no idea what Peter Roy even looks like). The fact is, all of us have some degree of personal interest when we undertake public service endeavors — every soccer coach I know has his or her own child in the program, and I doubt that any of us will still be doing it 10 years from now. The interests of the CRC may not be entirely altruistic, but that does not mean that they are motivated solely by self-interest.

None of us should accept what the CRC has to offer without appropriate public input — indeed, I previously wrote a letter to the editor opposing the proposal of the CRC's predecessor, the Chamber of Commerce Revitalization Committee, to submerge the downtown utility wires underground at the expense of every ratepayer, until the funding issues of the schools, public safety, and other town matters are resolved.

But truth be told, our village area is shabby, and our harborfront could stand some spit and polish. It's obvious that there never has been a plan to make the village and harborfront areas fulfill their potential, both for business interests and the residents such as myself who come to the village on a daily basis. Some quick examples: what passes for a sidewalk (i.e., the fading white line in the street) around the rock supporting St. Stephen's is a hazard for pedestrians, as is the practice of parking cars on the sidewalk along Elm St. from Fleming's to North Main St., which forces pedestrians out into the street; the asphalting of our sidewalks along the Town Common, which elevates them inches above the adjacent grass areas, creates a safety hazard (both my wife and daughter have turned their ankles when they have fallen off the asphalt) and makes our village ugly; and the lack of a crosswalk at the end of the James Brook Walkway from the town parking lot, forces pedestrians to walk 40-50 yards in either direction to get to a crosswalk if they want to get to Tedeschi's, French Memories, the hardware store, or the bank.

Fears of the Nantucketization of our town are grossly overstated. To quote Gertrude Stein's reference to Oakland, "There's no there, there." We have little worry that making our village and harborfront spiffier and more user-friendly will draw hordes of tourists, but it can make it a more attractive place in which to live and which might encourage a few more businesses to open up to replace the empty storefronts. Cohasset is the obverse of the usual truism — it's a nice place to live, but you wouldn't necessarily want to visit it. After all, our lone public beach only accepts resident parking stickers, as do the lighthouse park and the town landing at Parker Avenue. We might get a few people from the immediate surrounding towns who'll come for lunch or dinner, but we're never going to be a tourist mecca as some have suggested might happen.

As someone who has lived in a variety of places before arriving here, I can say without fear of successful contradiction that small communities such as ours which are cash-strapped and lack the financial wherewithal to improve its downtown to any extent would welcome a private group such as the CRC with open arms. As I mentioned, my view is that the village is a bit shabby-looking, and it was much worse-looking before Mr. Ordelheide spent a small fortune to renovate the former fire trap known as the Red Lion (which was a disaster waiting to happen). I was incredulous that some folks objected to the colors of the paint job which Mr. Roy donated — they certainly were much more attractive than peeling.

So yes, we always must consider who's going to pay how much and for whose benefit when any public works project is undertaken. But it seems to me that we have to be willing to listen to what the CRC has to say before jumping to conclusions.

Revitalization

TO THE EDITOR:

The defenders of the recent petition argue that planning should be led by town officials. Yes, but by what town officials, commission or board? What town body would lead the way to preserving the town while initiating some constructive improvement? I suggest that just about every valued feature of the town has been the result of initiative by groups of well-meaning citizens. The Board of Selectmen and other boards and commissions may have been supportive or at least permissive, but they normally don't take the lead. Either the initiative and energy comes from a group of concerned citizens, or nothing is likely to happen..

The petition suggests that "normal decision making processes are being circumvented." How so? None of our regulatory bodies have been disbanded or been shorn of their powers. Town moneys can be expended only as a result of a vote at town meeting. In what way is "the autonomy of town officials eroding"? A catchy and inflammatory phrase, but nonsense. None of them have been paid off or otherwise seduced, nor threatened with bodily harm. No, they will continue to be able to exert their will freely!

The petitioners are concerned "when the agenda and vision for Cohasset is set by CRC and not by our elected/appointed officials". Again, who are the officials charged with the responsibility for vision and for the agenda to implement the vision? As already stated, the vision that has resulted in the many valued features of the town has come largely from citizen initiative. There is nothing stopping the petitioners from getting on board and doing something constructive about the planning and implementation.

The petitioners, and various letter writers, suggest that "the CRC agenda focuses on enhancing the economic interests of a few businessmen". Besides being a shamefully scurrilous and narrow-minded allegation, the statement reveals woeful misunderstanding of the planning suggestions that have been drafted.

Sure, a lot of distinguished people signed the petition. Demonstrates the saying that "democracy is the process of counting heads without regard for what's in them"! Ironically, some of the signers have been public spirited leaders for other projects. Can't we stop and think, instead of recycling and reinforcing each others misconceptions? Let's appreciate and benefit from initiative and energy, and cooperate with it.

Herewith a partial list of the valued features of the town which resulted from the initiative and energy of private citizens: our several churches; our playing fields; our Community Center; our library; our Sandy Beach Association; our Sailing Club; our Lightkeepers Corporation (Bancroft Hall); our Art Center; our buildings maintained by the Historical Society; our Pump Project; our Antoine Wilson Memorial; our Yacht club; our Golf Club; our Swim Center; our Music Circus; our Conservation Trust lands.

Sharp contrasts drawn in senate debate

By Jeanne M. Rideout
JRIDEOUT@CNC.COM

The League of Women Voters is urging everyone to bring a friend to vote, so don't expect state Senate contenders Jim Cantwell and Bob Hedlund to show up at the polls together.

In the Democratic primary race when Cantwell bested Marshfield's Ted LeClair, harmony was the order of the day, with the two opponents agreeing on every major issue.

The debate hosted by the League of Women Voters last week showed the Democratic and Republican opponents disagreeing on every issue from Greenbush to tax rollbacks.

Even when Republican incumbent Hedlund and Democratic challenger Cantwell agree, they disagree.

Both oppose a Mills shopping center at the former naval air station, but Cantwell faulted Hedlund for not attending what he claimed was a large percentage of the meetings of the Naval Air Station Planning Committee (predecessor of the South Shore Tri-Town Development Corporation). It was the NASPC that signed the agreement with Mills Corporation that has been carried forward.

"I would have attended 100 percent of the meetings," Cantwell said.

Hedlund defended his role in the planning process.

"I took what I believe was a courageous step. I was the first elected official to break ranks and oppose the mall," Hedlund said.

Cantwell, who said he is for restoration of the Greenbush rail line as long as the appropriate mitigation is completed, accused Hedlund of wavering on the issue.

Hedlund said his ability to fight effectively to protect communities from the impacts of Greenbush is not compromised by his longstanding opposition to the project.

Cantwell said Hedlund was sending "mixed messages" because last June he voted in favor of a $225 million transportation bond bill that included funding for Greenbush in conference committee but against it on the Senate floor. Hedlund said he did not oppose the bill in committee because it contained dozens of other transportation projects.

Cantwell renewed a campaign theme that Hedlund no longer wants to be senator, while Hedlund depicted Cantwell as a carpetbagger who moved to Weymouth a year ago just to campaign. (Weymouth makes up 40 percent of the eight-town Plymouth and Norfolk District.)

Both found ammunition to accuse each other of ineffective leadership.

Cantwell faulted Hedlund, a four-term Senator who has served a total of 10 years, for not being able to pull together enough allies to sway the vote to scrap Greenbush.

"In 10 years, he couldn't make 20 friends," Cantwell said.

Hedlund cited Cantwell's lost opportunity to stop the Logan runway expansion that opponents say would threaten the quality of life on Weymouth and the entire South Shore. Hedlund faulted Cantwell, a former aide to U.S. Rep. William Delahunt, D-Quincy, for not convincing Delahunt to fight the proposed expansion.

"Did you speak up and ask him to change his position?" Hedlund asked.

The two candidates were expected to resume the battle last night (Wednesday, Oct. 25) as the contest continues in a debate sponsored by Community Newspaper Company at Hingham Town Hall.

The opponents found some agreement on the eight ballot questions.

Both oppose ballot question 3, which bans dog racing.

Supporters of banning dog racing say racing greyhounds are inhumanely treated and that the state is supporting a dying industry. Opponents say the measure would destroy a 65-year old industry and leave thousands unemployed.

Hedlund said most recent documented cases of inhumane treatment have been out-of-state.

"This looks like something we can gradually phase out, but there is a human factor, so I would vote no," Hedlund said.

Cantwell said he would also vote for dog racing to continue, but would work with organizations seeking to prevent cruelty to animals.

Both are in favor of ballot question 2, which proposes taking away incarcerated felons' right to vote.

Hedlund supports question 4, which would reduce the state income tax to 5 percent. Cantwell opposes it, saying it was a "back door tax" on to local towns.

Citing the $4 billion budget surplus, Hedlund said this was a tax cut that would reach all taxpayers and that he would work to preserve local aid.

Cantwell said this was an election year gimmick that went too far and would "turn back the clock on improvements we have made." Cantwell said he favored targeted tax relief.

Treat me like a dog

And the woman of Canaan said, "Yet the dogs eat of the crumbs which fall from their masters' table." (Matthew 15:27)

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Fido and Spot may have taken the leftovers two thousand years ago, but it's a different deal for man's best friend now that the third millennium is here.

You can't call it a dog's life any more and mean it.

Just the other day, the City Council in Boulder, Colo. adopted an "animal code" which labels those among us who have dogs and other pets "guardians" rather than "owners" in an effort to get people to think of pets as family, not property.

I also note that Becky Bishop, who runs Puppy Manners, a dog training center in Woodinville, Wash., recommends that prospective owners . . .excuse me, guardians... of new puppies take a week's leave of absence to make the new arrival feel at home.

"Peternity leave," she calls it.

Around Chicago — where, I may point out, only a dog survived Al Capone's St. Valentine's Day Massacre — the Four Seasons Hotel has "The Tail Wagger" on the menu. It's a plate of shredded braised beef and steamed rice, all for only $8.

And you thought a 69-cent can of Alpo was high living.

Guardians spend nearly $9 billion a year worldwide on food for the canine members of the family (but only $6 billion for baby food), and $10 million of that goes for "Big Scary Kitties" biscuits and other treats at the Three Dog Bakery in Kansas City.

Business is so good the company expects to be listed on the Stock Exchange before the end of the year.

"It's a little mind-boggling," says Dan Dye, co-owner of the 11-year-old bake shop. "We started out dropping a dozen one-pound bags of dog biscuits at our vet's office. Now, these big Wall Street firms are asking us about an IPO."

You can also find a professional dog masseuse in the Chicago Yellow Pages who will calm a nervous Yorky or an angry Rottweiler for a mere $40 a hour. It's only part of the estimated $23 billion that guardians spend on their pets each year.

"The old expression, 'He's treating me like a dog,' doesn't mean what it used to mean," says Bill Schoolman, executive vice president of the American Pet Products Manufacturers Association.

Now, I learn that Bill Schleiff, who has a dog shop in Weymouth, is offering day care for those guardians who just can't bring themselves to leave a member of the family home alone, even if he has four legs and chases cats.

Call them "latch-key pups."

Schleiff calls his dog care center "Doggieritaville," named after a popular house drink, the Doggierita, made from ice cubes and a twist of bouillon and given as a reward after a tough 10 or 12 hour day of socializing with their four-footed peers.

Next thing you know, Dog Days will replace Ladies' Days at big league ball parks.

What's that? The Chicago White Sox open the doors to their Comiskey Park to dogs for one game a year?

They can't be very popular, though. Only 550 four-footed fans showed up for the last one.

CANDIDATES CORNER

Bradley tax relief

Former Plymouth County Prosecutor and current Democratic Candidate for State Representative Garrett Bradley today detailed his tax relief proposal for residents of Hingham, Hull and Cohasset.

In a recent newspaper article outlining each candidate's tax proposal, Bradley provided specific ideas for responsible tax relief. "The residents of Hingham, Hull and Cohasset deserve genuine leadership on important issues like tax relief," stated Bradley. Bradley supports a tax rollback from 5.95 percent to 5.0 percent over a five to seven year period that is tied to the unemployment rate. With this responsible safety mechanism in place, taxpayers would receive tax relief while the state would remain fiscally secure. He advocates for using a portion of the recent tobacco settlement to help relieve cities and towns from the pressure of unfunded state mandated programs, as well as an increase in state tax deduction limits for charitable donations. Bradley also supports current "circuit breaker" legislation that protects seniors from losing their homes due to soaring property tax rates.

U.S. Senator John F. Kerry joined Sen. Edward M. Kennedy and Congressman William Delahunt (D-Quincy) in endorsing State Representative candidate Garrett Bradley in his campaign for the Third Plymouth District. Kerry praised Bradley's record as a former Assistant District Attorney in Plymouth County. "Garrett's work in the Plymouth County family courts and in the community reflects a tireless commitment to the working families of Hingham, Hull and Cohasset. I know he will be a strong advocate for children and families on Beacon Hill."

McKenna backs finance reform

Mary Anne McKenna, state representative candidate for the towns of Hingham, Hull and Cohasset, attended an early morning breakfast with Sen. John McCain last week. McKenna, who was accompanied by Mary Jeanette Murray, has received a written endorsement from Sen. McCain. Said McKenna, "This man is a rock-solid American. I am honored and humbled by his endorsement."

During his speech, Sen. McCain said, "I'm worried about the proliferation of money in politics. There is a growing need for the removal of those special interest groups who influence the political process. Please join me in this great crusade for campaign finance reform, it is the gateway to all other issues."

Also present at the breakfast was Thomas Patterson, Harvard University JFK School of Government. Professor Patterson said, "Seventy-five percent of the voting public believe that candidates will do or say anything to get elected. And 80 percent believe those contributors to campaigns, especially the special interest groups, are too close to the candidate and have too much influence over them."

McKenna supports the Massachusetts Campaign Finance Reform bill presently before the House. Said McKenna, "It is designed to limit contributions and limit influence to campaigns. My campaign is an all-volunteer group of citizens from Hingham, Hull and Cohasset. We have raised $26,000 so far with 99 percent coming from within the district. We will not accept special interest money or PAC money."

To volunteer with the McKenna campaign, call 383-1620.

Bush/Cheney campaign

Polly Logan, Republican Party vice chair and Plymouth Norfolk State Committee member, announced that Rob Spofford of 14 Heather Drive will serve with her as co-chair of the Bush/Cheney Campaign Committee for Cohasset.

Spofford has assisted numerous state and local campaigns. Currently Spofford serves as chairman of the school facilities committee where he has been a member for more than five years. During his tenure the committee successfully has completed construction of the new Joseph Osgood Elementary School and was instrumental in the successful passage of the $42 million project to renovate the Deer Hill and middle senior high schools. He is the coordinator and active coach of the Cohasset youth softball program as well as a previous coach with the Cohasset soccer club.

As entrepreneur, Spofford is the president and current owner of Spofford Group Insurance Brokerage Ltd. located in Hingham. A graduate of Northeastern University he earned his degree in finance. He resides in Cohasset with his wife, Susan and four daughters.

Residents who want to volunteer or to secure a lawn sign, "Dear Friends" cards or assist "Get out the Vote" effort should call Spofford at 383-1680 or 749-8990 or Logan 383-0031.

Halloween curfew

TO THE EDITOR:

Anyone who has had occasion to interact with the young people in Cohasset know they are smart and creative and a joy to be around. Most would never interfere with younger children's Halloween. It is not their idea of fun.

Few would ever destroy a family's Halloween display though apparently some have, nor would they set a book bag on fire and try to destroy the soccer shed at Milliken-Bancroft field though again last week some have.

These few seem to need to act out a rage that reflects only their own insecurity or dispiritedness. There are some steps we can take as a community. On Halloween let's try to comply with the voluntary 9:30 p.m. curfew. As young people and parents together let's care for one another and try to keep one another out of harm's way. And when a mistake is made, let's name it accepting that there are consequences and there is love both of which yield growth. It's not cool to act out destructively. Instead, it is a lot of fun to appreciate each other for the creative, joyful people we are and into which we grow.

Sewer betterment for existing users

TO THE EDITOR

In recent days, the Sewer Commission has received a number of phone calls regarding the betterment charges that were recently issued to existing users of the Wastewater Treatment Plant. All of the charges to new and existing users were explained in three widely advertised and publicized public meetings in 1996 and 1997 and at the March 29, 1997 Town Meeting. However, in the interest of those who did not attend one of these meetings, it is worthwhile to review the basis for the charges.

In the first place, prior to renovation the plant was some 35 years old and it was in violation of its discharge permit. The State took the Town to court and we were forced "to clean up our act" by a court order.

Secondly, after 35 years of service the plant was close to the end of its useful life. It was antiquated and outmoded, and in need of a full overhaul.

Thus, even if no new customers were added to the plant, the existing users have gotten their money's worth over the last 35 years and now it is appropriate that they share in the cost of renovating the plant and preparing it for many more years of reliable service.

The new and old users should realize that the costs of this project have been heavily subsidized by the State. In addition to state subsidies, the town's taxpayers have very generously agreed to pay for 50 percent of the capital cost. Finally, sewer users should also realize that a house connected to the sewer system has an increased value in the real estate market, almost always in excess of the betterment charge.

Concerning how the betterments were distributed, the Sewer Commission divided the overall construction project into two parts: Plant Improvements and Collection System Extension. The 50 percent of the Plant Improvements project borne by the users is divided up between all the old and all the new users. The 50 percent of the Collection System Extension project borne by the users is divided up only among the new users. Therefore, old users are being assessed only for their share of the plant upgrade costs, and not for the new pipes in the streets.

I hope that this information is helpful and do believe that all of the people in the Central Sewer Service area are better off because of the projects.

Gary Vanderweil
Chairman, Cohasset Sewer Commission.

Ballot questions

TO THE EDITOR,

Massachusetts's voters will face some important choices on Nov. 7. In addition to electing a president, voters will cast ballots on two initiatives that will affect the future of public education in this state: Questions 4 and 6.

Question 4 is an irresponsible and costly reduction in the state's income tax. Question 6 would give motorists a rebate for the amount they pay in tolls (as long as they save their toll receipts and turn them in at the end of the year!)

If these tax cuts are passed, we will lose a golden opportunity to invest in our schools and other important priorities such as health care for children and reducing the state's tremendous debt.

Our strong economy has enabled the commonwealth to build up a surplus. That gives us a once in a lifetime chance to make significant improvements in our local schools. If Questions 4 and 6 pass, my hope of smaller class sizes, foreign language classes in the elementary schools and full day kindergarten will be harder to achieve.

When faced with a choice between better schools for our children or saving a few dollars in taxes, I know which way I'm going to vote. Please join me in voting no on Questions 4 and 6 on Nov. 7.

Cell phones

TO THE EDITOR:

Your point of removing cell phones from drivers being draconian is correct. Talk about a regulation which will not only be difficult to enforce! Lawmakers, law enforcement people, politicians, etc., are just as needy of communication time, maybe more so, than other users. Will they pull off the road when a call should be made? Barring them seems as difficult and impractical. There are better ways.

For many years lightweight headsets of a variety of makes and styles have been available. Perhaps the lightest and smallest is one which literally is a foam puff ear piece with a small but mighty microphone about 6 ins. down the wire. The person on the other end of a conversation can hardly tell a remote microphone is being used it's so good. Others are just about as good, or better, but a bit bulkier. I've been using them for 2-3 years.

Advantages? Worn on the inside ear, they allow for outside the car clear-as-normal hearing. The inside ear suffers no more than about 10-20 percent obstruction. While conversing with a headset, it's easy to turn to view traffic when merging, turning, and looking at mirrors without the distraction of trying to hold a phone while doing so. Holding a phone up to one's ear while driving is dangerous, tiring, distracting, and a general obstruction to good driving. Phone conversation while using a headset is less distracting than conversing with a passenger, listening to the radio loud, or other previously mentioned distractions in last week's editorial. They are readily available at many stores. I have found the best ones are those you don't mind losing, breaking, etc, and priced under $20. Take your time to pick the best one, then take time to get used to it, or you may not be satisfied.

Hagerty support

TO THE EDITOR:

On behalf of the Hagerty Property Committee, I would like to express my appreciation for the show of support at Town Meeting.

This project took a long time to reach what is now its final stage. We should be able to go out to bid in the next few weeks, and with a hopefully mild winter have everything ready for the 2001 boating season.

With a walkway connecting to Government Island, a dock with a temporary tie-up float as well as a larger parking lot, congestion at the boat ramp should be minimal. The plans also call for green space and benches for taking in the view. All in all we feel that this will be an asset that everyone in town will use.

Again, thanks for your support for this project.

tor, Franca Curry. But the program was a remarkable one as it provided strength through doing exercises in a pool.

"It's all about doing pool exercises and even some land exercises," she said. "It's also a lot of stretching. It really promotes upper body strength. The upper body is the main goal. But what some people don't realize is that Bosom Buddies also serves as a mini-support group."

When Johnson first joined the program, it was simply called "Breast Health Exercises," and it only met once every week. It was renamed "Bosom Buddies" by Johnson, and the program is still going strong. The group now meets twice a week, and its membership keeps growing.

"It worked for me," Johnson said of the program, noting that she still participates in the group. "I can open jars now, anyway."

She says the program, along with the love and support of her boyfriend of 13 years, has helped her on her road to recovery. She says she's confident in her ability to live a normal life, but she is also very careful.

She has every right to be. If it wasn't for her insisting on getting a mammogram when she initially felt a lump on her left breast years ago, her story could be much different.

"I had found a lump on myself at that time, so I decided I should probably go in for a mammogram," Johnson said. "When I went to the doctor and said I wanted a mammogram, I was told the lump was probably nothing because I was too young. I was persistent. I wanted the biopsy because I felt that lump and because I have a family history of ovarian cancer.

"A woman knows her own body. I just knew something was wrong."

Johnson finally got the mammogram that she wanted but the test yielded some startling results.

"The doctors were shocked to find that I was in stage one of breast cancer," Johnson said. "It was shocking for me to hear too especially because I was always thinking if I got any kind of cancer, it would be the ovarian kind."

Johnson's doctors told her the cancer in her left breast was spreading so she opted to have the breast removed. After the operation, she underwent six months worth of chemotherapy and some basic physical therapy. Johnson said she was not affected too much by her chemotherapy treatments.

"I never lost my hair or anything like that," Johnson said, "but various people react differently to chemotherapy."

After she finished her chemotherapy sessions, Johnson continued to visit her oncologist every three months, then every four months. She also continued to have mammograms done on the breast she still had intact.

In 1997, just a few years after her first surgery, Johnson said "some abnormal cells" were detected in her right breast.

"The doctors were sure I had cancer again," Johnson said. "They called it a 'new site.' At that point I remember telling them 'Just do the mastectomy.'"

The doctors did. Johnson's right breast was removed, and she went through another six months of chemotherapy.

Since then, no more cancer has turned up in her body, but she's not taking any chances.

"I'm keeping a close eye on it," she said. Johnson is indeed doing everything she can to keep an eye on herself, but she also makes it a priority to keep herself in shape through the "Bosom Buddies" program.

"Even though I feel I'm living a normal life, cancer is always on the forefront of my brain," she said. "The times that I get the worst feelings is when I go to the doctor to get blood work done. My anxiety level definitely goes up—you never know what that blood work is going to show."

Despite her anxiety when it comes to checkups, Johnson maintains her confidence. She said having both breasts removed bothered her at first, but she has come to accept it.

"God intended my body to be this way," she said. "A lot of women consider reconstructive surgery, but I decided not to."

Regarding which way breast cancer itself is headed, she said "There's a growing awareness, people detecting it earlier, and the survivorship rate seems to be getting better. I feel awareness is what's saving people."

Johnson said for women who have just been diagnosed with the disease, one of the most important things to do is to talk to other women in support groups who are in the same situation. Johnson said she herself would always help someone in that situation.

"I will help anyone, anytime, anywhere," she said. "Having someone to talk to is one of the most important aspects when you're diagnosed with something like breast cancer."

But one thing Johnson couldn't stress enough was the importance of getting mammograms on a regular basis, even if doctors think it may not be necessary.

"Sometimes younger women think it won't happen to them," she said. "But look what happened to me. I was very young when I got it. Getting mammograms are part of just being aware. And the more awareness goes up, the more people survive."

Research brings new treatments, new hope

By Seth Jacobson
STAFF WRITER

In Massachusetts alone, 4,400 women will be diagnosed with breast cancer this year — 1,000 of them will die.

Those are the kind of statistics motivating researchers around the country who are working to find a cure and new ways to treat breast cancer.

"There could be some better treatments coming over the next decade," said MIT professor Dr. Robert Weinberg who won the Medal of Science in 1997 for his work in cancer research. Weinberg is considered to be one of the people who revolutionized cancer research, as he has been involved with it since the early 1970s.

"While we don't have a cure, diagnosis is the most important thing," Weinberg added. "The diagnostic techniques out there are getting better and better."

But even though better ways of detection are coming through in the country, Weinberg said "the incidents of breast cancer are still pretty constant."

"Massachusetts has the highest rate of breast cancer in the country," added Deborah Hochanadel, the co-director of The Massachusetts Breast Coalition in Randolph. "Clearly, we need some answers. One of the problems we see doesn't have to do with early detection. It has to do with prevention. We need more research to be done on what's actually causing the disease in addition to finding more ways to treat it. There's definitely an environmental aspect to the cause."

Weinberg, however, said he believes the environmental influences on the disease are "very minimal. But we know there's some factors in terms of lifestyle that are responsible for cancer. There's also been several genes found which play a role in breast cancer."

Weinberg said a recent breast cancer discovery was made by a company called Genentech in California. He said the company did research in which it recognized a certain protein which could possibly slow down the growth of breast cancer.

Aside from counting on scientific breakthroughs, Weinberg said some of the ways women can try to avoid getting breast cancer are by having children earlier and maintaining a diet low in fats and meats. He also noted that 5 to 10 percent of all cases of breast cancer in the country are "inherited" from a given parent.

Although Hochanadel agrees with Weinberg regarding the importance of early detection, she reiterated more research needs to be concentrated in the field of prevention. And unlike Weinberg, Hochanadel said she and members of The Silent Spring Institute on Cape Cod feel there are indeed some environmental connections to the disease.

"Breast cancer starts in the milk ducts (of the breast)," she said. "The cancer could be in there years before a mammogram could detect it. We're very supportive of early detection. I'm just saying there needs to be more effort put into looking for the actual causes, some of which I believe are environmental causes."

"We focus on some of the environmental pollutants relating to the disease" added Dr. Julia Brody, the executive director of the institute. "We're trying to identify some of the chemicals (in the environment) that women are most exposed to."

Brody said the environmental influences can be classified as "mammary carcinogens," materials which make breast cancer cells multiply. Some of the materials being looked are plastics, various detergents, pesticides, and even fuel.

"It's our priority to find out whether certain environmental factors make a difference," Brody added. "The sad reality right now is that we don't know how to prevent the disease, so that needs to be done. I do agree with early detection, but mammograms really just identify cancers that are already there. I also agree with finding newer ways to treat the disease, but for those who have not been diagnosed with the disease yet, research into prevention is extremely important.

"We're working to make a difference on a year-round basis, and it's something people should involve themselves in all the time. Having a month dedicated to breast cancer awareness is great, but people need to understand that this is being worked on all the time, and we're going to keep at it." Brody said.

Hochanadel said she's thrilled so much attention is paid to breast cancer during October, but "it's got to go on beyond" that timeframe. "Awareness is high, but it can never be high enough. Everyone's eyes have to be wide open.

"There's a lot of people working together on this," Weinberg said.

Skippers season to be shaped in next three weeks

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Having reached their bye-week with a 14-6 win over Arlington Catholic on Saturday, coach Tony Rolfe figured this was a good time to both reflect on the seven games his Cohasset football team has played and look ahead at the three games still remaining.

"Overall, I'd say we've played well," appraised the third year head coach. "We won most of the games we should have and we've played a couple of real strong opponents very tough."

Not surprisingly, though, the coach was quick to add: "I would've liked wins in those games rather than just morale victories. Morale victories only go so far."

The undersized Skippers are 4-3 overall, 0-3 in South Shore League play. Rolfe's charges have beaten the four non-league opponents on their schedule—Archbishop Williams (24-13), Nantucket (12-8), Cape Cod Tech (13-3) and Arlington Catholic.

Of Cohasset's three league losses, two came to the clear class of the conference, Carver (6-0) and Norton (5-1). The Skippers gained a measure of respect and self confidence in providing these two powerhouses with legitimate challenges. They trailed Carver by only a point at the half, before being overwhelmed by the much bigger team in the second to fall 29-6. A late fourth quarter touchdown by Norton made the final of 15-0 appear more lopsided than it actually was.

However, the third loss—a 36-29 back and forth affair in Abington (3-3)— is the one that still haunts Rolfe.

"We had that one in the palm of our hands, and we let it slip away," said Rolfe. "I think if we'd have won that game, we'd feel a lot better about our season at this point in time.

"But I think we've got a chance to feel pretty good about ourselves if we can pull out a few wins in the games we have coming up."

The Skippers final three games are against league rivals who, like them, find themselves in the large second tier of the SSL (everyone other than Carver and Norton at this point). They take on Norwell (0-3, 3-4) at home next Friday night, travel to Hanover (1-1, 4-2) the following Friday and then finish up with their Thanksgiving showdown versus Hull (2-1,5-2) at home.

A win next week over three time defending league champion Norwell, decimated by graduation and injury this season, would probably go a long way toward wiping the lingering memories from the Abington loss out of Coach Rolfe's mind.

"(Norwell) has beat up on us and the rest of the South Shore League pretty good for the last few years, so a win over them would really make the kids feel good about themselves," offered Rolfe.

Skippers beat A-C, 14-6

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

The final score of 14-6 does not accurately reflect the Skippers level of dominance in Saturday's win over Arlington Catholic.

However, after three straight losses, coach Tony Rolfe is not complaining…much.

"A win is a win," noted Cohasset's third year coach. "We could've put the game away pretty early if it wasn't for a few mistakes, but at least we got back into the win column."

A solid ground attack by Brian Krupczak (130 yards on 20 carries) and a strong defensive game were nearly squandered by a number of ill-timed Skippers' penalties and turnovers.

Cohasset started the game on the right foot, putting together an impressive drive capped off by a 10 yard pass from Jason Brown to split end Nick Bolster.

However, three lost fumbles, including one at the goal line, nearly came back to haunt them, as A-C got a 15-yard touchdown run from Dominic Baccini shortly before halftime. This score was set up on a questionable 15-yard roughing the passer penalty whistled on Cohasset that wiped out an interception return for a touchdown. Fortunately, the Skippers were able to stop the two point conversion, allowing them to go into the break up one, 7-6.

Krupczak was able to break loose mid-way through the third quarter for a 20-yard touchdown run to provide an eight point cushion.

Boys head into tourney on right foot

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

Possession is supposedly nine-tenths of the law, but it's been absolutely critical in the Cohasset High boys' soccer team's nailing down of a berth in the Division 3 South Sectional tourney after last year's .500 season.

Since Day 1, first-year coach Dave Nigro has stressed the vital importance of controlling the ball and finishing off scoring opportunities against the Skippers' South Shore League opponents.

The Skippers bought into Nigro's coaching philosophy, hook, line and sinker, and it resulted in a fine 9-6-1 record, which culminated with a strong 1-0 win over 11-3-1 Hanover on Monday.

The Skippers opened the season with a well-played 3-0 loss to the Indians. At the time, Nigro was still instilling the benefits of ball possession and had yet to direct his full-time energies to emphasizing the importance of finishing off prime scoring chances.

The boys made strides in putting the ball in the net, though the

"We are playing only a 17 game schedule. That puts a damper on things."

Cohasset field hockey coach Debbie Bostwick, referring to the fact the seeds are based on points for wins and ties.

Heading into the post season, with what looks like a good opportunity to advance for the first time ever, the varsity field hockey squad powered past Notre Dame Academy last Thursday, 1-0.

The lone goal of the contest came from senior captain Andi Shaughnessy, her 16th goal of they year. With six assists to boot, the senior captain is ranked second in the South Shore League with 22 points, behind only Mike (pronounce MEE-kay) Bortolotti of Hanover.

The assist came from senior captain Kelly Devine off a free hit.

Senior goalie Krysten Considine, leading the league with 10 shutouts and a mere seven goals allowed through 15 games, recorded 16 saves. The shutout was quite a feat, as she, coupled with a fantastic defense, stopped every one of Notre Dame's 13 corners.

"Krysten played incredible," stated Bostwick, who will certainly nominate her netminder for the upcoming All-Star game. "She will definitely make [the All-Star team]. If she doesn't, there is something wrong."

The aforementioned defense shut down Notre Dame's high powered offense with superior speed. Seniors Ashley Ulmer, Morgan Hurley and Karen McMorris, all stand outs on the varsity track team, stopped the Aces cold the entire game.

After Notre Dame beat the Lady Skippers 3-0 last year, and played to a 1-1 draw a few weeks ago, the victory was especially sweet.

"The kids really wanted to beat them," said 14h year coach Debbie Bostwick. "We were embarrassed there last year, and they were not going to be embarrassed this year."

Cohasset, with 11 seniors on the squad, has pulled to within second place in the league, behind Hanover.

In addition to a large core of possible league All-Stars, including those who were on the team last year, Shaughnessy, O'Connor and senior captain Sarah Kidder, Cohasset has had a great supporting cast, the self proclaimed "B squad."

"The juniors and sophomores that are backing [the seniors] up, they know their time is next year," effused Bostwick. "You have got to stay pumped when you might get in or you might not."

One sophomore in particular who has shined this year is Heather

6th grade, 7th grade, and 8th grade girls may try-out for the Cohasset Traveling Teams. There will be three teams.

The teams wear official Cohasset uniforms, learn high school drills and plays and compete in the multi-town Old Colony League. The teams are tutored by Ellen Carr, Head coach of the Cohasset High School Varsity and Junior Varsity Teams.

Last year our 6th grade team fought from fourth place regular season finish to win the championship. The beat previously unbeaten Braintree in an outstanding game by both teams. All three teams played hard all year long.

Most importantly, all teams gained valuable competitive playing time and learned high school skills and plays.

The teams practice evenings during the week and play games on the weekends, typically home games (at the high school) on Sundays and away games on Saturdays.

Sailing Club to close docks Oct. 28

Attention Cohasset Sailing Club Members. All dinghies and boats must be off the club docks and out of the water before October 28th.

The docks will be hauled out of the water on Saturday October 28th and all boats must be off the docks prior to that day. The Club also needs help from its members in hauling the docks out on the 28th.

Please come to the Club House Saturday morning if you wish to help.

Boys head into tourney on right foot

Skippers did hit some snags along the way, losing to a few overall inferior teams. In a perfect world, Nigro believes the Skippers could have "legitimately" finished 12-4 or 13-3. Soccer, though, is truly a game of capitalizing on scoring chances, getting a good bounce here and there and avoiding the goalposts and crossbar as much as possible. Throw in the fact that Cohasset played a superb Norwell High team twice and Hanover two other times and Nigro is pleased with the way the regular season turned out.

And what better way to culminate the regular season than winning a tight 1-0 decision against tourney-tested Hanover. The lone tally against the Indians came midway through the first half when Doug O'Brien drilled in an indirect kick from Erik Shea. Goalkeeper Nick Pestone earned his seventh shutout of the season by turning away the six shots Hanover players were able to put on him on those rare occasions they got past the aggressive blockade provided by midfielders Matt Bilodeau and Peter Maitland.

"We've been working on finishing goals," Nigro said. "We outplayed them during the game and the kids are pretty confident."

By winning their last seven games of the season, the Skippers have momentum on their side heading into the tourney. And Nigro is the perfect coach to keep a team from letting its confidence slip over that always-dangerous line of overconfidence. He realizes Cohasset isn't a team without its weaknesses and they'll be worked on during pre-tourney practices.

"We need a lot of (scoring) opportunities because we don't convert a lot of them," Nigro assessed.

The team, though, is mentally tough and must remain so during a single-elimination tournament. One thing that is quite apparent is no team will garner any runaway victories over the Skippers. Cohasset played tenacious soccer all season. In the two games against undefeated Norwell, the Clippers didn't score the deciding goal until the final five minutes of each 2-1 victory.

"We played them well both times, home and away," Nigro said.

With the tourney not getting underway until the first week of November, Nigro will stay busy keeping his players sharp. He's looking to scrimmage another team, most likely an independent squad whose season is also over. Those plans, though, are still tentative.

"I would have rather we played 18 games and played through this week," Nigro said.

Soccer fans can get into a post season frame of mind on Nov. 1 when Cohasset hosts the all-star game between the SSL and Patriot League. The girls play at 6 p.m. at Alumni Field and the boys get underway at 8 p.m.

"It should be a good night to watch a soccer game," Nigro said.

Like the Skippers, SSL champions Norwell also plays a possession-type game, concentrating on setting up high-percentage shots on goal rather than bolting down the field and taking haphazard shots the entire game.

Cohasset has to believe it can win close games in the tourney. Nigro knows his players have the talent to put the ball in the net. What he has to drill home is that mental letdowns make the difference in advancing or being eliminated in the post season.
